I need to re-do the software and the best way is to just reformat the "C" dive and start over.

I just work when I have time so may begone a day or two.

Bye.

There are probably some pretty computer savvy people reading your posts. If you describe the problem, maybe someone will have a solution. Sure, I guess it'd be off topic for the group, but so are 90% of the other posts here and yours would be more interesting to read than the vast majority of them.

Are you kidding? These morons won't serve in the military, even the people

Band allocations and time zone conversions for the USA. Includes broadcast bands used outside the USA. For multi-use bands, primary usage is shown.
Some stations operate outside official bands. Information is from Oct 2008 FCC rules and Sep 2009 NTIA manual, see Chapter 4 of:

Frequencies are in kHz. Usual spacing in shortwave broadcast bands is 5 kHz. Frequencies above 10000 kHz tend to propagate better during the day; frequencies below 10000 kHz tend to propagate better at night.

Phone line as SW antenna

Changes preceded by "|".

WARNINGS AND DISCLAIMERS

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area.
Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines | usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the | telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead.
Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should
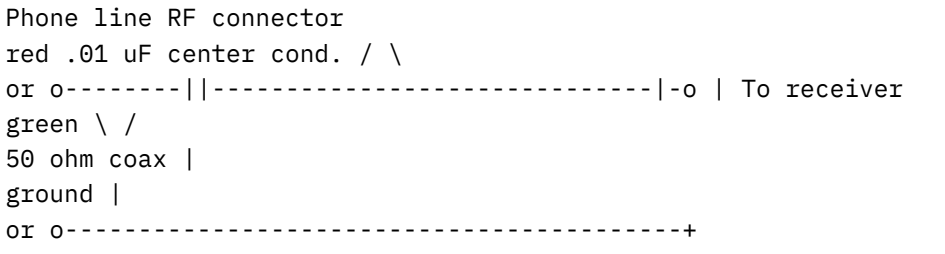
| be rated 250 volts or higher.



N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

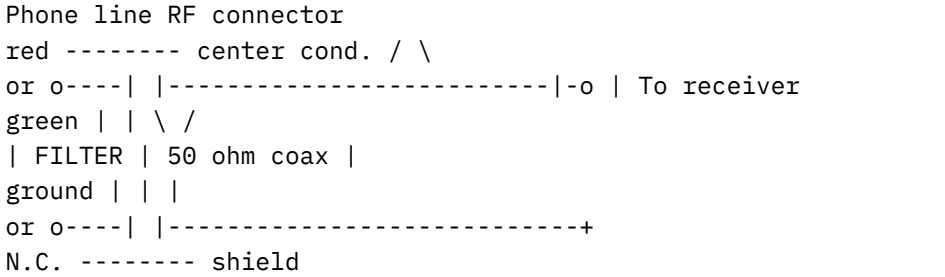
A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:



| RECOMMENDED FILTERS
| If you don't want to make your own filters, the following have good | performance, are well-built and affordable:
| Model 400 BCB interference filter (3.5 MHz highpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#bcb

| Model 420 HF lowpass filter (30 MHz lowpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#3
| (scroll down a bit to see the model 420)
| If you have a random-wire antenna, the following unit will provide | impedance matching and lightning protection (connect antenna to 450-ohm | terminal):
| Model 182A beverage matching unit

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
{ {
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

From: bill@videovax.tv.tek.com (William K. McFadden)
Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

LOW-PASS FILTER (Rejects FM, TV, etc.)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

signal in ------- filter 1 -------- filter 2 -------- signal out

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics, left and right ends are interchangeable.)

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

Parts for the filters can be obtained from the following source:

The radio has a downward firing bass port that is designed for a table

I can use 3rd party media programs to look at the files, but I bought it to use apps (it's a shitty music player IMHO).

A copy of Puppy on a bootable CD is invaluable when troubleshooting a desktop. It has a great partitioner (gparted).

Puppy 5 is Ubuntu-I don't like it.

You know nothing. Henry helped invent the bookshelf speaker. He's the one who used dolby noise reduction to make Philips cassettes a respectable hifi medium. He invented home theater.

AR, KLH, Advent, Kloss, Cambridge Soundworks, Tivoli Audio

I buy new drives every couple years and copy the old ones to the new

(They give these guys dexedrinee, Paxil, and machine guns; anybody see a problem with that?)

The US army is understood to be searching for dozens of digital photos allegedly taken by soldiers showing their colleagues posing with Afghan civilian corpses. If released in public, they could create a worldwide furore similar to that sparked by the images of American guards mistreating Iraqi prisoners at Abu Ghraib, and would undermine the US effort to win over the Afghan public.

The war crimes investigation is the most serious the US army has faced in Afghanistan during its nine-year presence.

Soldiers who served with Sgt Gibbs in Afghanistan allegedly told investigators he pressed his comrades to cut fingers off Afghan corpses, and kept at least two fingers wrapped in cloth hidden in an empty water bottle.

Some allegedly claimed he planned to intimidate other members of his unit to keep quiet, and one soldier said Sgt Gibbs claimed he planned to make a necklace with the fingers.

He and four other soldiers are currently charged with conspiracy to murder three unarmed Afghans between January and May, though new records show a fourth may have been killed. Seven other soldiers are accused of dismembering bodies and removing bones.

Linux is fun and I am always rooting for it. I would switch over to it myself IF it were easier to install software without "breaking" your system. I know there are steps you can take to make sure that an installation isn't going to mess up your system and those are helpful, but they don't give me anywhere near the reliability I'd need to switch over to Linux completely.

I have a Linux EeePC that runs for months without a reboot. Windows is way more likely to break something. A Live CD of Linux allows you to check hardware compatibility, etc., without actually installing anything (other than a deltas file if you so choose).

And most Union thugs have no choice but to attend this fiasco. It's

Reality Check :
If National Service was good enough for HRH
thttp://chicagoboyz.net/blogfiles/PrincessElizabethInUniform500px.jpg

Then it's good enough for America's Rich Sons and Daughters To Have To Serve in the US Military and Go To War :
There Will Be Fewer Wars [.]

Then it's good enough for America's Elite Educated Young Men and Women To Have To Serve in the US Defense Chief Warns Most Americans Detached from

* the poor and un-under-educated http://www.google.com/group/rec.radio.shortwave/msg/9d19e76e29818607

BpnJ - There would be plenty of 'exemptions' for Alternative National Service in the US Military :

1 - Doctors, Nurses and other Medical Professionals who worked at US Public Health Care Clinics for 5-Years would be exempted.

2 - Teachers and Educators who works at US Public Schools K~12* for 5-Years would be exempted.
* Not Private Schools and Not Colleges

3 - Engineers and Scientist who worked at US Military and Government Agencies [NASA] for 5-Years would be exempted.

4 - All other US Collage Grads for the Rest of their Lives : Would be Required to Pay a 5% Added to their US Income Tax Surcharge; plus 1% Annually of their Personal {Family} Wealth over $1M.

FINALLY : US High School Graduates would NOT be required to preform National Military Service but would be required to Registrar for the Draft and could be Drafted by Lottery in Time of a Declared War by Act of Congress Only.

NOW : If any US High School Graduates {American US Citizens}; that did not Graduate from Collage; wanted to Voluntarily Join the US Military and could Pass the Tests : God Bless Their Patriotism - Amen

Once Again : America's Brightest that Receive America's Best and Highest Education should be Required to : Give Back {A Full Measure} To America.

http://www.chris-floyd.com/articles/1-latest-news/2028-friendly-fire-whining-up-front-warmongering-in-the-back.html

It is almost certain that we will never learn the real reasons behind these particular attacks; the operations of the Terror War are obscured by so much deliberately fomented murk, so many factions with various covert agendas, and so much "plausible deniability" that specific events can rarely be discerned with any clarity. But the general fact of Obama's relentless escalation of military action in and against Pakistan cannot be denied. Likewise, the result of this surge, if it continues apace, is equally clear: the further destabilization of a nuclear-armed nation now suffering one the greatest humanitarian disasters in modern times, with a concomitant rise in extremism, desperation, violence, and the world-shaking destabilization of a region already long poised on the brink of nuclear war.

As I've said here before, you must forgive me for not being overly concerned about the political fortunes of a president and a party embarked on a course of such murderous lunacy.

Whatever. That's not my argument.

The only thing that will create fewer wars will be when ALL people of the world chosoe leaders who choose peace. Until then, the world's demagogues will lead their tin soldiers to their deaths.

Idiots-R-Us : Liberal-Fascist Media Turning Anti-Hispanic*

* Anti-Minority -If- The Minority Will Not Toe The Liberal-Fascist {Progressive Agenda} Party Line

CNN Anchor Rick Sanchez FIRED By The CNN Network Friday
http://www.cnn.com/2010/US/10/01/cnn.sanchez/index.html?hpt=T2

Rick Sanchez is Cuban-American* {Hispanic}
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Rick_Sanchez
* Actually Born in Cuba

Was Rick Sanchez Factually Correct
-but- Politically Incorrect in his comments . . .
http://www.nydailynews.com/news/national/2010/10/01/2010-10-01_anchor_rick_sanchez_fired_by_cnn_over_comments_about_jon_stewart_jews_in_the_med.html

Were Rick Sanchez comments about Jon Stewart being an open in-your-face Bigot* with a well know Public Bias : "a bigot" and then said that he was bigoted against "everybody else who's not like him.
http://www.nytimes.com/2010/10/02/business/media/02cnn.html?src=busln

* About Jon Stewart being 'Jewish' or really about Jon Stewart Being an Uber-Liberal-Fascist that Daily Attacks Anyone and Everyone Who Is NOT !
http://www.google.com/hostednews/ap/article/ALeqM5jsKwGqhY3jM5l3a5dDTb-bWGEk7gD9IJ7AG80?docId=D9IJ7AG80

About Jon Stewart on The Daily Show
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Jon_Stewart
-fwiw- Until today I did not know that Jon Stewart is/was Jewish
-imho- Jon Stewart has always been a Media Attack Dog directed at Young Viewers using smears and half-truths to destroy anyone and everyone who did not toe the Liberal-Fascist Media Agenda.

? Do You Think {Feel} Jon Stewart is Liberal-Fascist Media Attack Dog ?
http://www.cbsnews.com/8301-503544_162-20018334-503544.html

? Is Rick Sanchez 'Right' About Jon Stewart Being Opening Bigot and Having a Liberal-Fascist Biases ?
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/1010/43025.html

? Does Jon Stewart being Jewish Minority "Trump" Rick Sanchez being a Hispanic Minority in the overall scheme of things in the Liberal-Fascist Media ?

? Why Can Jon Stewart {a Jew} Get Away with Being a Bigot and Biased Daily for Years On-the-Air ?
-but- ? Rick Sanchez {a Hispanic} Can NOT Be a Bigot and Biased Once without Getting Fired ?
-or- ? ? ? If It Is Not Jew -versus- Hispanic ? ? ?
-then- ! ! ! It Must Be About "Liberal-Fascism" ! ! !
About the Liberal-Fascist Control of the Media and Attacking All Those Who are NOT Liberal-Fascists.

THE BIG QUESTION : Is CNN Being Racist In Firing Rick Sanchez ? : It Sure Do Look Like It !
-and-i-think-so- ~ RHF
For ME the Underlying Issue Is NOT Jews in American being a small Minority 2%~3% and Wielding a very Considerable Influence in American Economic, Cultural, Intellectual and Political Life; including the Mass Media ?
http://ihr.org/leaflets/jewishlobby.shtml
Again for ME the Issue is NOT whether they are Jewish {Cause Every Christian Has One Rabbi and His Name Is Jesus : How Can I Hate Jews
If I Love Jesus} But Their Liberal-Fascist Politics and Attack Tactics against all others.

=Translation= "NeoCons" = good, Good. GOOD !

it is impossible for liberals to be fascists. fascists hate liberals, trade unionist, socialists, communists, jews(because most of them are liberal), the weak, the disabled, minorities, homosexuals. they are intolerant of other views and religions. they practice bigotry, racism, and homophobia, etc. say, i just described the modern conservative movement:)

That may just be the oldest Holy Place in the world, as far as we know today. 11,500 years ago. That is much older than the Sumerian and other ancient cultures. It is even older than the original Jericho settlement. The archeologists can't read the pictograms either . Very mysterious civilization indeed . Pretty high up in the mountains too.

No, not if it helps them get the job done. They often give pilots speed anything which is necessary ...

There should be a civilian board, composed of just average joe-six-pack-Americans to review what is done. If our military or government is engaging in criminal actions, as determined by the board, then they should be brought before a court just as any other criminal(s)

The seriousness of the investigation/inquiry is really a moot point. If crimes have been done, their seriousness is worth dealing with. Anyone can allege anything ...

Kewl, sounds like the type of man to do the job for us. As long as he only possesses enemy fingers, and they are legit enemy, give him anything he wants ...

Yeah, well, like I said, anyone can allege anything ... bring 'em into a court and punish them if valid. However, if not, punish those alleging the false allegations ... DUH!

Dead, dismembered enemy and/or radical mooselums following the kookooran please me. Again, anyone can be charged with anything, if valid, punish them, if not, punish those doing the charging ... but one of them needs to get it up the bum!

The housekeeper should have never gotten across the border with her evil-spawn of an anchor baby in the first place. I would like to see obama and anyone else derelict in their duties of protecting American citizens from these crimes imprisoned and punished!

The north American indians, and south American indians in mexico need to

Hey,I have an idea. Why don't mexxkins,Central Americans and South Americans clean up their own countries instead of running scared straight for the U.S and bringing their crime and corruption here? We have enough crime and corruption here already with the Dimorat party.
We don't need to invite more.

I certainly hope you are NOT one of those fools who think a change in party will change the corrupt public servant in the office. Remember, it all got a whole bunch worse from regan on. regan was the one who tore off all controls and let the banksters, wall street and government organized crime loose. No change in party, from republic-crat to demo-can, and back and forth, has made the slightest bit of difference in the treasonous plans the shadow government keeps enacting on the American citizens this totally corrupt government is victimizing. This country has been without a president, ever since Kennedy.

Look at any ballot, all you see is a list of treasonous criminals you DON'T want in a public servant office!

Chapter 1: Financing the 1933 Elections
On the cold winter weekend of January 28, 1933, Germany was officially without a government. Chancellor Kurt von Schleicher and his cabinet had resigned on Saturday afternoon, and eighty-six-year-old President von Hindenburg had not yet appointed a new chancellor. A nervous tension spread over Berlin. Everyone waited for news; most felt Germany was at an historic turning point.
Who would be the next chancellor? Hitler - the leader of the largest party, the Nazis, who pledged to destroy democracy? Papen - the aristocratic horseman who had been chancellor before Schleicher, but who had no popular following? Perhaps Schleicher again, if he could persuade the Social Democrats, the second largest political party in the country, to join him in a coalition? Governing Germany in the middle of an economic depression with nine million unemployed was not an enviable task. The country had just had three different chancellors in rapid succession. By tradition, the leader of the largest party was usually appointed chancellor. But the Nazis had been the largest party for over a year, and so far intrigues and political maneuvering had succeeded in keeping Hitler out of power. Everyone guessed what a Hitler government would mean. He had not kept his militarism, anti-Semitism, and dictatorial ambitions a secret.
Political intrigues were so numerous that weekend that no one really knew what was going on. Sensational rumors were being spread throughout the city. Some said an army coup was imminent, that Schleicher and the generals were about to abduct President von Hindenburg and declare martial law. There were also rumors of an armed Nazi uprising and a general strike by the socialist workers.
Hitler and Hermann Goering, the second most powerful man in the Nazi party, stayed up all night on Sunday, January 29, trying to figure out what Hindenburg might do. It was not until after 10 A.M. on Monday that Hitler received a summons to the president's office. Even at that point, the Nazis were not certain whether Hitler would be appointed chancellor or Hindenburg would ask him to serve as vice-chancellor.

Across the street from the Chancellery, in the Kaiserhof Hotel, Hitler's lieutenants were waiting, unsure of what was going on. Goebbels, the Nazi propaganda chief, said:

In the street the crowd stands waiting between the Kaiserhof and the Chancellery. We are torn between doubt, hope, joy and despair. We have been deceived too often to be able, wholeheartedly, to believe in the great miracle. [S.A.] Chief of Staff Roehm stands at the window (with binoculars) watching the door of the Chancellery from which the Fuehrer [the leader, Hitler] must emerge. We shall be able to judge by his face if the interview was a success. Torturing hours of waiting.
At last, a car draws up in front of the entrance. The crowd cheers. They seem to feel that a great change is taking place....
A few moments later, he is with us. He says nothing. His eyes are full of tears. It has come! The Fuehrer is appointed Chancellor. He has already been sworn in by the President of the Reich. All of us are dumb with emotion. Everyone clasps the Fuehrer's hand....Outside the Kaiserhof, the masses are in a wild uproar....The thousands soon become tens of thousands. Endless streams of people flood the Wilhelmstrasse. We set to work...at once.
Hitler's victory was not a complete one by any means. He had been appointed chancellor in a coalition government. Papen was to be his vice-chancellor, and all the powerful cabinet posts were held by Papen's conservative allies, rather than the Nazis. But at the moment, Hitler's followers weren't worried about the details; for them the only thing that mattered was that Hitler was chancellor. They had come to power! All day, crowds gathered in the square outside the Kaiserhof Hotel and the Chancellery.
At dusk Nazi storm troopers in their brown uniforms gathered in the Tiergarten park, along with men of the Stahlhelm, an ultranationalistic veterans' organization, for a torchlight victory parade through the center of Berlin. As soon as it was dark, they came marching by the thousands through the Brandenburg Gate, carrying swastika flags and the black, white, and red flags of the German empire. Bands marched between the units, beating their big drums as the men sang old German military songs. But as each band came to the Pariser Platz, where the French embassy was located, they stopped whatever they were playing and, with an introductory roll of drums, broke into the tune of the challenging war song "Victorious We Will Crush the French."
The torches carried by the marchers glowed hypnotically in the darkness. To foreign witnesses, it was a frightening sight. "The river of fire flowed past the French Embassy," Ambassador François-Poncet wrote, "whence, with heavy heart and filled with foreboding, I watched this luminous wake." Liberal Germans found it an "ominous sight." It was, wrote one German reporter, "a night of deadly menace, a nightmare in...blazing torches."
As the marchers came by the Chancellery, there were tumultuous cheers for Hitler, who stood in an open window saluting them. He was so excited that night, he could hardly stand still. He was raising his arm up and down heiling, smiling, and laughing so much, his eyes filled with tears. "It was an extraordinary experience," recalled Papen, who was standing behind Hitler. "The endless repetition of the triumphal cry: 'Heil, Heil, Sieg Heil!' rang in my ears like a tocsin." When Hitler turned to speak with Papen, his voice choked with emotion. "What an immense task we have set for ourselves, Herr von Papen - we must never part until our work is accomplished." Hitler and Papen were much closer allies than anyone at the time imagined.

It was after midnight when the parade ended. Being too excited to sleep, Hitler, Goering, Goebbels, and a few other Nazis sat up talking for hours. They could hardly believe it had actually happened: they were in the Chancellery at last. That evening, Hitler said to Goebbels, "No one gets me out of here alive." It was one of the few promises he kept.

On the morning of January 31, Hitler's storm troopers gave the German people a glimpse of what Nazi rule would be like. All over Germany, thugs in brown shirts took possession of the streets and roughed up Communists, socialists, and Jews; they chased socialist mayors and officials out of government buildings and even broke into the private homes of their political enemies. When people complained to Papen, he laughed. "Let the storm troopers have their fling." Among his friends at the Herrenklub, an exclusive gentlemens club, he boasted: "We've hired Hitler." To a skeptic he replied: "What do you want? I have Hindenburg's confidence. Within two months we will have pushed Hitler so far in the corner that he'll squeak."

The facts seemed to support Papen's optimism. Not only did Papen have Hindenburg"s confidence, but in fact the old president had promised never to receive Hitler unless he was accompanied by his vice-chancellor. Papen also held the important post of minister-president of Prussia, Germany's largest and most powerful state. From the composition of the cabinet, it seemed all the real power was in the hands of the conservatives: the aristocratic General von Blomberg was minister of defense, Baron von Neurath, a career diplomat, was foreign minister, and the old archreactionary Hugenberg was both minister of economics and minister of agriculture. The Nazis were outnumbered six to two.

The two Nazis in the cabinet, Wilhelm Frick and Goering, held posts that were thought to be insignificant. Frick was minister of the interior, but he did not control the police, which in Germany was under the jurisdiction of the individual state governments. Goering was made minister without portfolio, but with the promise that he would be minister of aviation as soon as Germany had an air force. He was also named minister of the interior of Prussia, an office that did not receive much notice by the public but did control the Prussian police.

The aristocrats and gentlemen of the Right who made up the majority of Hitler's cabinet hated the concept of democracy even more than the Nazis did. These men belonged to the old ruling class of the kaiser's

Germany. They wanted to regain their old position of supremacy, lost in 1918. They wanted to restore the monarchy, suppress the socialist unions, avenge the loss of World War I, and make Germany the dominant power in Europe. It was obvious why such reactionary nationalists helped put Hitler in power: their goals and his were very similar.
Few people knew the full extent of Papen's collaboration with Hitler. Historians have said he "did more than anyone else outside the Nazi party to help Hitler to power." Papen helped Hitler because he was trying to control him and use the Nazis for his own aims.
Papen was a handsome aristocratic-looking man with distinguished gray hair and an officer's mustache. From an impoverished family of the Westphalian nobility, he became a General Staff officer, a skillful horseman, and a man of great charm. After a successful marriage to the daughter of a wealthy Saar industrialist, he bought a large block of shares in the Center party's newspaper, Germania. For a short time in 1932, Papen was chancellor, but his government had no popular support.
Papen believed it would be rather easy for an aristocratic officer like himself to manipulate a former corporal, like Hitler, and thus be able to use the Nazi's mass following to accomplish the aims of the upper-class conservative nationalists.
Hitler immediately began to outmaneuver his conservative colleagues. He reported to the cabinet that the Center party was making impossible demands and could not be counted on to form a coalition with the Nazis and the Nationalists that would have a majority in the Reichstag. Because of this situation, Hitler argued he would have to call for new elections. The only "demand" the Center party made was that Hitler promise to govern constitutionally, but none of the other members of the cabinet bothered to check Hitler's statement. They agreed to new elections on the condition that Hitler promise that the composition of the cabinet would not change regardless of the outcome of the voting.
New elections would provide Hitler with a chance to improve on the poor results the Nazis had received at the polls the past November. If the Nazis won a clear majority in the elections, they might be able to get rid of their coalition partners. Hitler had every reason to believe the election campaign would be a big success. The entire machinery of government, including the radio, was now under Nazi control and could be used for campaigning. The party had been flooded with new applicants for membership since he had become chancellor. In the cabinet meeting on February 2, Hitler discussed his preparations for the elections. Wilhelm Frick, the Nazi minister of the interior, proposed that the government set aside a million marks for the election campaign. Count von Schwerin von Krosigk, the minister of finance, rejected this suggestion. Hitler did not force the issue. He would have to get the money elsewhere.
The theme of the Nazi election campaign was to be the fight against communism. Hitler opened the attack in a late-night radio broadcast to the nation on February 1. He blamed the hard times Germany had gone through since 1918 on the Social Democrats, which had been the largest party in the Reichstag during most of those years. The Social Democrats, he reminded his listeners, were actually a Marxist party. "Fourteen years of Marxism," he said, "have ruined Germany; one year of bolshevism [communism] would destroy her. The richest and fairest territories of the world would be turned into a smoking heap of ruins. Even the sufferings of the last decade and a half could not be compared to the misery of a Europe in the heart of which the red flag of destruction has been hoisted." He went on to promise to put the unemployed back to work and save the peasants from bankruptcy.

On his fourth day in office, just after opening the election campaign, Hitler took time off to attend a very important dinner. He had been invited to the home of General von Hammerstein, chief of staff of the army, to meet the leading officers of the army and navy. In a speech that lasted almost two hours, Hitler explained his plans for rebuilding German military power.
The generals were the real power in Germany during the Weimar period. After World War II, many Germans tried to cover up the role certain members of the Officer Corps had played in helping to put Hitler in power. Many historians naively accepted this view, but the real story is quite different. Traditionally, the German Army ruled from behind the scenes and had the final "power to veto" any important issue. After the loss of World War I, the Versailles Treaty severely restricted the size of the German Army. The only way the generals could maintain mass training and develop new weapons was to finance private paramilitary units, like the Free Corps, with secret army funds.
Hitler not only began his career as an army agent, but even in the 1930s he was supported by a powerful faction in the army. Over several years, General von Schleicher, who was in charge of a secret informal political department of the army, funneled over ten million marks to Hitler. Why? Many military officers wanted an authoritarian government that could unify the nation. The people needed to be infused with a new spirit of patriotism because powerful interests were planning a war of revenge against the Allies. Naturally there was a division of opinion among the generals as to how much power to give Hitler. Hindenburg originally had strong reservations about appointing a man from a lower-class background, like Hitler, chancellor. However, the aggressive action the Nazis took against Communists was admired by Hindenburg, and his relationship with Hitler rapidly improved.
One day, Hindenburg summoned Hitler when Papen was away from Berlin. Hitler informed the president that Papen was out of town and reminded him of the rule he (Hindenburg) had made, that the chancellor could visit him only when accompanied by the vice-chancellor. "The old gentleman [Hindenburg]," said Hitler, "replied that he wished to see me alone, and that in the future the presence of Papen could be regarded as unnecessary. Within three weeks, he had progressed so far that his attitude towards me became affectionate and paternal. Talking of the elections fixed for the 3rd of March, he said, 'What are we going to do if you fail to get a majority? We shall have the same difficulties all over again.'"

At the beginning of the election campaign, Hitler and Papen persuaded old President von Hindenburg to sign an emergency decree to protect law and order. The decree gave Nazi officials the right to prohibit public meetings. Newspapers could be suppressed if they "incited" civil disobedience or published "false" reports.

Well, on second thought, the heads are a little heavy to wear as a necklace. Still, you could shrink them into a necklace of shrunken heads ... perhaps still a bit heavy for a small framed person though. But, the heads would make great bookends, look good on poles in your yards, be in a "surprise box" you leave about to catch unwitting guests, have your child carry, with a candle in it, on Halloween, etc.

It is just wasteful to throw the heads away ... really, he should be charged with something if he just keeps tossing the heads!

110. Liberal Fascists Versus Gold

One of the many slick tricks of the Obama administration was to insert a provision in the massive Obamacare legislation regulating people who sell gold. This had nothing to do with medical care but everything to do with sneaking in an extension of the government's power over gold, in a bill too big for most people to read.

Gold has long been a source of frustration for politicians who want to extend their power over the economy. First of all, the gold standard cramped their style because there is only so much money you can print when every dollar bill can be turned in to the government, to be exchanged for the equivalent amount of gold.

When the amount of money the government can print is limited by how much gold the government has, politicians cannot pay off a massive national debt by just printing more money and repaying the owners of government bonds with dollars that are cheaper than the dollars with which the bonds were bought. In other words, politicians cannot cheat people as easily.

That was just one of the ways that the gold standard cramped politicians' style-- and just one of the reasons they got rid of it. One of Franklin D. Roosevelt's first acts as president was to take the United States off the gold standard in 1933.

But, even with the gold standard gone, the ability of private individuals to buy gold reduces the ability of the government to steal the value of their money by printing more money.

Inflation is a quiet but effective way for the government to transfer resources from the people to itself, without raising taxes. A hundred dollar bill would buy less in 1998 than a $20 bill would buy in the 1960s. This means that anyone who kept his money in a safe over those years would have lost 80 percent of its value, because no safe can keep your money safe from politicians who control the printing presses.

That is why some people buy gold when they lose confidence in the government's managing of its money. Usually that is when inflation is either under way or looming on the horizon. When many people start transferring their wealth from dollars into gold, that restricts the ability of politicians to steal from them through inflation.

Even though there is currently very little inflation, purchases of gold have nevertheless skyrocketed. Ordinarily, most gold is bought for producing jewelry or for various industrial purposes, more so than as an investment. But, at times within the past two years, most gold has been bought by investors.

What that suggests is that increasing numbers of people don't trust this administration's economic policies, especially their huge and growing deficits, which add up to a record-breaking national debt.

When a national debt reaches an unsustainable amount, there is always a temptation to pay it off with inflated dollars. There is the same temptation when the Social Security system starts paying out more money to baby boom retirees than it is taking in from current workers.

Whether gold is a good investment for individuals, and whether the gold standard is the right system for a country, are much more complicated questions than can be answered here. But what is clear is that the Obama administration sees people's freedom to buy and sell gold as something that can limit what the government can do.

Indeed, freedom in general cramps the government's style. Those on the left may not be against freedom in general. But, at every turn, they find the freedoms granted by the Constitution of the United States hampering the left's agenda of imposing their superior wisdom and virtue on the rest of us.

The desire to restrain or control the buying and selling of gold is just one of the many signs of the inherent conflict between the freedom of the individual and the left's attempts to control our lives.

Sneaking a provision on gold purchases and sales into massive legislation that is supposedly about medical care is just one of the many cynical tricks used to circumvent the public's right to know how they are being governed. The Constitution begins, "We the people" but, to the left, both the people and the Constitution are just things to circumvent in order to carry out their agenda.

There are problems with the gold standard, but in lieu of the present money system, it would be better ... at least until we get a handle on the crooks, banking into the hands of our government, and the government back in the hands of the people.

Inflation is the carrot before the horse ... when you are in danger of achieving the "American Dream", they hit the inflation button and you stay with your nose to the grindstone ... if you are just figuring that out, bud, it is too late for you ... we had price controls which prevented this from happening, indeed, the price controls had been implemented because of the great depression ... regan tore 'em off and it has been downhill ever since.

There is little inflation because no one is buying the homes, cars, etc. at the current prices ... since wages always trail inflation, it is nonsensical to ever think that inflating those prices will cure the problem which inflated prices caused ... but hey, you are dealing with a government which gave the wealthiest >1% of the people money to bail them out of the "recession" (depression.) Oh well, you only restate, in differing words, what I have been saying ... there has not been a decent candidate on the ballot in decades ... well, there was Ron Paul ... still, the ballot will remain nothing but a list of people who SHOULD NOT BE in public servant positions until we "fix" things.

Do what? WTF are you babbling about? Do you want corporations to run everything? Wasn't the Army better when they cooked their own food?

The TV has made you stupid and ridiculous. Try to learn the truth.

" America faces its greatest threat since the Civil War. The worst fears of the Founders are being realized, as powerful corporate interests have taken over our culture and representative government. We the People now face a fundamental choice: take back our country ... or do nothing, and become victims of tyranny and empire.

In We the People: A Call to Take Back America, Thom Hartmann (the acclaimed author of Unequal Protection and The Last Hours of Ancient Sunlight) tells a compelling story ï¿½ of how a government of, by, and for the people has been replaced by corporate domination. Through brilliant analysis and Neil Cohn ï¿½s imaginative illustrations, this fully graphic book illuminates the central dynamics of American politics.

He reveals the forgotten history of the Foundersï¿½ intent and the devious way that corporations came to possess ï¿½humanï¿½ rights. He explains what the Boston Tea Party actually was, how the events of the 19th centuryï¿½s ï¿½Second American Revolutionï¿½ resemble todayï¿½s administration, and how ï¿½corporatistsï¿½ disguised as conservatives are looting assets from We the Peopleï¿½s common ownership through privatization schemes.

Most importantly, the book issues a call to action from citizens who want to restore true democracy, and liberty and justice... for all.

Chapter 1: Financing the 1933 Elections
On the cold winter weekend of January 28, 1933, Germany was officially without a government. Chancellor Kurt von Schleicher and his cabinet had resigned on Saturday afternoon, and eighty-six-year-old President von Hindenburg had not yet appointed a new chancellor. A nervous tension spread over Berlin. Everyone waited for news; most felt Germany was at an historic turning point.
Who would be the next chancellor? Hitler - the leader of the largest party, the Nazis, who pledged to destroy democracy? Papen - the aristocratic horseman who had been chancellor before Schleicher, but who had no popular following? Perhaps Schleicher again, if he could persuade the Social Democrats, the second largest political party in the country, to join him in a coalition? Governing Germany in the middle of an economic depression with nine million unemployed was not an enviable task. The country had just had three different chancellors in rapid succession. By tradition, the leader of the largest party was usually appointed chancellor. But the Nazis had been the largest party for over a year, and so far intrigues and political maneuvering had succeeded in keeping Hitler out of power. Everyone guessed what a Hitler government would mean. He had not kept his militarism, anti-Semitism, and dictatorial ambitions a secret.
Political intrigues were so numerous that weekend that no one really knew what was going on. Sensational rumors were being spread throughout the city. Some said an army coup was imminent, that Schleicher and the generals were about to abduct President von Hindenburg and declare martial law. There were also rumors of an armed Nazi uprising and a general strike by the socialist workers.
Hitler and Hermann Goering, the second most powerful man in the Nazi party, stayed up all night on Sunday, January 29, trying to figure out what Hindenburg might do. It was not until after 10 A.M. on Monday that Hitler received a summons to the president's office. Even at that point, the Nazis were not certain whether Hitler would be appointed chancellor or Hindenburg would ask him to serve as vice-chancellor.
Across the street from the Chancellery, in the Kaiserhof Hotel,

Hitler's lieutenants were waiting, unsure of what was going on.
Goebbels, the Nazi propaganda chief, said:

In the street the crowd stands waiting between the Kaiserhof and the Chancellery. We are torn between doubt, hope, joy and despair. We have been deceived too often to be able, wholeheartedly, to believe in the great miracle. [S.A.] Chief of Staff Roehm stands at the window (with binoculars) watching the door of the Chancellery from which the Fuehrer [the leader, Hitler] must emerge. We shall be able to judge by his face if the interview was a success. Torturing hours of waiting.
At last, a car draws up in front of the entrance. The crowd cheers. They seem to feel that a great change is taking place....
A few moments later, he is with us. He says nothing. His eyes are full of tears. It has come! The Fuehrer is appointed Chancellor. He has already been sworn in by the President of the Reich. All of us are dumb with emotion. Everyone clasps the Fuehrer's hand....Outside the Kaiserhof, the masses are in a wild uproar....The thousands soon become tens of thousands. Endless streams of people flood the Wilhelmstrasse. We set to work...at once.
Hitler's victory was not a complete one by any means. He had been appointed chancellor in a coalition government. Papen was to be his vice-chancellor, and all the powerful cabinet posts were held by Papen's conservative allies, rather than the Nazis. But at the moment, Hitler's followers weren't worried about the details; for them the only thing that mattered was that Hitler was chancellor. They had come to power! All day, crowds gathered in the square outside the Kaiserhof Hotel and the Chancellery.
At dusk Nazi storm troopers in their brown uniforms gathered in the Tiergarten park, along with men of the Stahlhelm, an ultranationalistic veterans' organization, for a torchlight victory parade through the center of Berlin. As soon as it was dark, they came marching by the thousands through the Brandenburg Gate, carrying swastika flags and the black, white, and red flags of the German empire. Bands marched between the units, beating their big drums as the men sang old German military songs. But as each band came to the Pariser Platz, where the French embassy was located, they stopped whatever they were playing and, with an introductory roll of drums, broke into the tune of the challenging war song "Victorious We Will Crush the French."
The torches carried by the marchers glowed hypnotically in the darkness. To foreign witnesses, it was a frightening sight. "The river of fire flowed past the French Embassy," Ambassador François-Poncet wrote, "whence, with heavy heart and filled with foreboding, I watched this luminous wake." Liberal Germans found it an "ominous sight." It was, wrote one German reporter, "a night of deadly menace, a nightmare in...blazing torches."
As the marchers came by the Chancellery, there were tumultuous cheers for Hitler, who stood in an open window saluting them. He was so excited that night, he could hardly stand still. He was raising his arm up and down heiling, smiling, and laughing so much, his eyes filled with tears. "It was an extraordinary experience," recalled Papen, who was standing behind Hitler. "The endless repetition of the triumphal cry: 'Heil, Heil, Sieg Heil!' rang in my ears like a tocsin." When Hitler turned to speak with Papen, his voice choked with emotion. "What an immense task we have set for ourselves, Herr von Papen - we must never part until our work is accomplished." Hitler and Papen were much closer allies than anyone at the time imagined.

It was after midnight when the parade ended. Being too excited to sleep, Hitler, Goering, Goebbels, and a few other Nazis sat up talking for hours. They could hardly believe it had actually happened: they were in the Chancellery at last. That evening, Hitler said to Goebbels, "No one gets me out of here alive." It was one of the few promises he kept.

On the morning of January 31, Hitler's storm troopers gave the German people a glimpse of what Nazi rule would be like. All over Germany, thugs in brown shirts took possession of the streets and roughed up Communists, socialists, and Jews; they chased socialist mayors and officials out of government buildings and even broke into the private homes of their political enemies. When people complained to Papen, he laughed. "Let the storm troopers have their fling." Among his friends at the Herrenklub, an exclusive gentlemens club, he boasted: "We've hired Hitler." To a skeptic he replied: "What do you want? I have Hindenburg's confidence. Within two months we will have pushed Hitler so far in the corner that he'll squeak."

The facts seemed to support Papen's optimism. Not only did Papen have Hindenburg"s confidence, but in fact the old president had promised never to receive Hitler unless he was accompanied by his vice-chancellor. Papen also held the important post of minister-president of Prussia, Germany's largest and most powerful state. From the composition of the cabinet, it seemed all the real power was in the hands of the conservatives: the aristocratic General von Blomberg was minister of defense, Baron von Neurath, a career diplomat, was foreign minister, and the old archreactionary Hugenberg was both minister of economics and minister of agriculture. The Nazis were outnumbered six to two.

The two Nazis in the cabinet, Wilhelm Frick and Goering, held posts that were thought to be insignificant. Frick was minister of the interior, but he did not control the police, which in Germany was under the jurisdiction of the individual state governments. Goering was made minister without portfolio, but with the promise that he would be minister of aviation as soon as Germany had an air force. He was also named minister of the interior of Prussia, an office that did not receive much notice by the public but did control the Prussian police.

The aristocrats and gentlemen of the Right who made up the majority of Hitler's cabinet hated the concept of democracy even more than the Nazis did. These men belonged to the old ruling class of the kaiser's Germany. They wanted to regain their old position of supremacy, lost in 1918. They wanted to restore the monarchy, suppress the socialist unions, avenge the loss of World War I, and make Germany the dominant power in Europe. It was obvious why such reactionary nationalists helped put Hitler in power: their goals and his were very similar.

Few people knew the full extent of Papen's collaboration with Hitler. Historians have said he "did more than anyone else outside the Nazi party to help Hitler to power." Papen helped Hitler because he was trying to control him and use the Nazis for his own aims.
Papen was a handsome aristocratic-looking man with distinguished gray hair and an officer's mustache. From an impoverished family of the Westphalian nobility, he became a General Staff officer, a skillful horseman, and a man of great charm. After a successful marriage to the daughter of a wealthy Saar industrialist, he bought a large block of shares in the Center party's newspaper, Germania. For a short time in 1932, Papen was chancellor, but his government had no popular support.
Papen believed it would be rather easy for an aristocratic officer like himself to manipulate a former corporal, like Hitler, and thus be able to use the Nazi's mass following to accomplish the aims of the upper-class conservative nationalists.
Hitler immediately began to outmaneuver his conservative colleagues. He reported to the cabinet that the Center party was making impossible demands and could not be counted on to form a coalition with the Nazis and the Nationalists that would have a majority in the Reichstag. Because of this situation, Hitler argued he would have to call for new elections. The only "demand" the Center party made was that Hitler promise to govern constitutionally, but none of the other members of the cabinet bothered to check Hitler's statement. They agreed to new elections on the condition that Hitler promise that the composition of the cabinet would not change regardless of the outcome of the voting.
New elections would provide Hitler with a chance to improve on the poor results the Nazis had received at the polls the past November. If the Nazis won a clear majority in the elections, they might be able to get rid of their coalition partners. Hitler had every reason to believe the election campaign would be a big success. The entire machinery of government, including the radio, was now under Nazi control and could be used for campaigning. The party had been flooded with new applicants for membership since he had become chancellor. In the cabinet meeting on February 2, Hitler discussed his preparations for the elections. Wilhelm Frick, the Nazi minister of the interior, proposed that the government set aside a million marks for the election campaign. Count von Schwerin von Krosigk, the minister of finance, rejected this suggestion. Hitler did not force the issue. He would have to get the money elsewhere.
The theme of the Nazi election campaign was to be the fight against communism. Hitler opened the attack in a late-night radio broadcast to the nation on February 1. He blamed the hard times Germany had gone through since 1918 on the Social Democrats, which had been the largest party in the Reichstag during most of those years. The Social Democrats, he reminded his listeners, were actually a Marxist party.

"Fourteen years of Marxism," he said, "have ruined Germany; one year of bolshevism [communism] would destroy her. The richest and fairest territories of the world would be turned into a smoking heap of ruins. Even the sufferings of the last decade and a half could not be compared to the misery of a Europe in the heart of which the red flag of destruction has been hoisted." He went on to promise to put the unemployed back to work and save the peasants from bankruptcy.
On his fourth day in office, just after opening the election campaign, Hitler took time off to attend a very important dinner. He had been invited to the home of General von Hammerstein, chief of staff of the army, to meet the leading officers of the army and navy. In a speech that lasted almost two hours, Hitler explained his plans for rebuilding German military power.
The generals were the real power in Germany during the Weimar period. After World War II, many Germans tried to cover up the role certain members of the Officer Corps had played in helping to put Hitler in power. Many historians naively accepted this view, but the real story is quite different. Traditionally, the German Army ruled from behind the scenes and had the final "power to veto" any important issue. After the loss of World War I, the Versailles Treaty severely restricted the size of the German Army. The only way the generals could maintain mass training and develop new weapons was to finance private paramilitary units, like the Free Corps, with secret army funds.
Hitler not only began his career as an army agent, but even in the 1930s he was supported by a powerful faction in the army. Over several years, General von Schleicher, who was in charge of a secret informal political department of the army, funneled over ten million marks to Hitler. Why? Many military officers wanted an authoritarian government that could unify the nation. The people needed to be infused with a new spirit of patriotism because powerful interests were planning a war of revenge against the Allies. Naturally there was a division of opinion among the generals as to how much power to give Hitler. Hindenburg originally had strong reservations about appointing a man from a lower-class background, like Hitler, chancellor. However, the aggressive action the Nazis took against Communists was admired by Hindenburg, and his relationship with Hitler rapidly improved.
One day, Hindenburg summoned Hitler when Papen was away from Berlin. Hitler informed the president that Papen was out of town and reminded him of the rule he (Hindenburg) had made, that the chancellor could visit him only when accompanied by the vice-chancellor. "The old gentleman [Hindenburg]," said Hitler, "replied that he wished to see me alone, and that in the future the presence of Papen could be regarded as unnecessary. Within three weeks, he had progressed so far that his attitude towards me became affectionate and paternal. Talking of the elections fixed for the 3rd of March, he said, 'What are we going to do if you fail to get a majority? We shall have the same difficulties all over again.'"
At the beginning of the election campaign, Hitler and Papen persuaded old President von Hindenburg to sign an emergency decree to protect law and order. The decree gave Nazi officials the right to prohibit public meetings. Newspapers could be suppressed if they "incited" civil disobedience or published "false" reports.

Five Hidden Costs of Gold
by Jeff Reeves
Wednesday, September 29, 2010

Commentary: Investing in gold isn't as easy as it looks There's a lot of talk right now about how gold is booming, and how gold bugs who have been stashing bullion under their mattresses over the last decade or so have made a killing.
That may be true if you look at the price of the yellow stuff per ounce. The price of an ounce of gold is up about 30% in the last year, or over 400% in the last 10 years. How does that relate to actual returns for investors?
The truth is that gold has steep hidden costs, and that looking at the numbers on paper doesn't tell the whole story. Here are big costs many investors overlook.
Higher taxes
The affinity for gold investing and a dislike of the government seem to go hand in hand, from predictions that massive government debt will render the dollar worthless to conspiracy theories that there will be another Executive Order 6102 in which Uncle Sam loots your safe deposit box and seizes your gold.
But the biggest reason for gold investors to get mad at the feds is their tax bracket. The IRS taxes precious metal investments — including gold ETFs like the SPDR Gold Trust (NYSE: GLD - News) and iShares Silver Trust (SLV - News) — as collectibles. That means a long-term capital gains tax of 28% compared with 15% for equities (20% if and when the Bush tax cuts expire next year).

While you may see your gold as a bunker investment, the IRS will treat you the same as if you were hoarding Hummel figurines. And that means a bigger portion of your gold profits go to the tax man.
Zero income
Just as the math game on gold price appreciation doesn't tell the whole story, the lack of regular payouts is another reason why the long-term profits quoted in gold are incomplete. Many long-term investors can't afford to stash their savings in the back yard for 20 years. Income is a very valuable feature of many investments and gold simply doesn't provide that.
Remember, simply looking at returns in a vacuum can't tell you whether an investment is "good" or "bad." Is it a good idea for a 70-year-old retiree on a fixed income to bet on penny stocks because they could generate huge profits? Even if those trades pay off, 99 out of 100 advisers would say something akin to "You got lucky this time, but don't tempt fate. Quit while you're ahead and don't be so aggressive."
Similarly, the volatile and income-starved gold market is not a place for everyone. Just because past returns for gold have been so stellar, that does not mean that gold is low risk or that investors who need a secure source of regular income will be well-served.
Gold scams take a toll
In a previous article, I detailed gold coin scams in detail. They include false gradings on the quality of the coins, the use of cheaper alloys instead of pure gold and even brazen scams where you don't actually even own the gold that you buy. And that's just on the coins front. Scams abound in pawn shops and "cash for gold" enterprises that refuse to give you a true value for your jewelry or other gold items.
You'd think it would be obvious that precious metals should never be purchased from anyone other than a broker or seller of good repute who provides proper documentations. But many investors fail to do their homework, or worse, can't tell forged documents from real ones.
Gold is ready-made to be a retail sales item, and with that comes all manner of unscrupulous activity. Vigilant investors can protect themselves, but do not underestimate the very real price of being taken to the cleaners by a gold scam if you don't do your homework.
High ownership and storage costs
Maybe through some creative accounting or selective amnesia at tax time you can mitigate the tax burden of gold. But one expense you can't as easily avoid is the high ownership cost of gold. After all, it's not like you mined it yourself — and all those middlemen between the ore and you want to get paid.
The first is that old tightwad Uncle Sam again. Even if you can avoid him going on the capital gains front, he gets you coming into gold via sales tax on most jewelry and coins. And then there are the high transaction costs and commissions that gold can carry. Anyone who has bought jewelry knows significant markups are part of the precious metals trade, and that's the same for investment gold as it is for engagement rings. The bottom line is that some of your initial buy-in goes towards the business of gold and you'll never get it back, not unlike realtor fees or broker fees.

And then there's the additional cost of storing your gold. You have to pay a fee for a safe deposit box, and if you have a lot of gold, that can run you a few hundred bucks a year for a good-sized box. Of course if you're afraid of that Order 6102 scam pulled by FDR you likely have your gold at home in a safe — so that's a one-shot deal. But are you really foolish enough to distrust the government but trust your gold stash to be safe without insurance?
The presumed "safety" of gold is good on paper, but obtaining the actual metal and keeping it safely stored is a costly endeavor.
Yes, gold can lose value
Proponents of gold love to claim that gold has never been worthless like Lehman Bros. or GM. And while this is true on its face, it is actually a half-truth. While gold may never become worthless, it is foolish to think it will never lose value.
Consider that after reaching a record high of $850 per ounce in early 1980, gold plummeted 40% in two months. The average price for gold in 1981 fell to a mere $460 an ounce — and continued nearly unabated until bottoming with an average price of around $280 in 2000. For those folks in their 40s and 50s who bought gold at that 1980 high, it took them 28 years to reclaim the $850 level. That's hardly much of a retirement plan, unless they lived to be 80 or 90 and just cashed out recently.
Gold is an investment, period. And no matter how gold bugs spin the metal as a hedge against inflation and a sure thing that will only go up, gold can lose its value — sometimes in a hurry, as in the early 1980s.

Liberty Net: September 25, 2010

http://3950.net/2010/10/liberty-net-september-25-2010/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE IONOSPHERE was reflecting signals so beautifully during the Liberty Net this week that many of the stations on 75 meters sounded like locals on 2 meters, which made for an effortless exchange of the hard-to-find information and insights that make the net famous.

Hereï¿½s a tiny selection of the topics discussed this week on amateur radioï¿½s longest-running discussion net, on the air since 1974:

ï¿½ Why is it so difficult for people of European descent to become American citizens these days ï¿½ a process that can take years or decades when it is allowed to happen at all ï¿½ when, according to the founding fathers, they should be the only ones allowed to become citizens at all? (10 minutes)

ï¿½ The paperwork requirements for small businesses are so huge that it must surely discourage millions of people from even starting a business. In addition, our freedom of association has been totally abrogated by the laws that force the hiring of favored racial and other groups. (17 minutes)

ï¿½ It is a sad commentary on our society to see that a third grade schoolboyï¿½s parents were charged with ï¿½child abuseï¿½ recently for allowing him to walk two blocks to school by himself, something which was normal and expected just a few decades ago. (33 minutes)

ï¿½ The FCC amateur rules regarding RF radiation are arbitrary and ridiculous for HF frequencies which cause no health effects whatsoever unless one actually contacts a conductor. But amateurs renewing their licenses are required to ï¿½certifyï¿½ radiation limits at their stations, limits that not one in ten thousand have the instrumentation to measure. This could provide a way for the government to get rid of any amateur licensee they so choose. (36 minutes)

ï¿½ Why are the American taxpayers being asked to fund ï¿½freeï¿½ cook stoves for India, south Asia, and Africa to the tune of $10 million a year? (53 minutes)

ï¿½ In Portland, Maine, a bomb recently went off outdoors within sight of the cityï¿½s ï¿½Muslim Center.ï¿½ When the Islamic elders told the police that a 13-year-old Muslim boy had simply been ï¿½experimentingï¿½ with explosives, it was decided not to arrest him ï¿½ at least for the moment ï¿½ even though another, undetonated, bomb was also found. (56 minutes)

ï¿½ Did the recent malware that targets Siemens nuclear reactor control systems come from Israel, as intelligence analysts claim? Is it possible that this will be used to cause a 9/11-like event to precipitate war with Iran? Could it be used to hold other nations hostage, too? (1 hour 19 minutes)

ï¿½ Our would-be corporate and government rulers want to create an "Internet 2" to replace the 'Net as we know it, with all information needing to be approved by ï¿½gatekeepers,ï¿½ just as in the print and broadcast media now. Will they create a false flag hacker takedown of our electric grid, or something even worse, in order to frighten the American rabbits into giving up their free speech? (1 hour 28 minutes)

Remember that you can receive the Liberty Net on the nearest clear frequency to 3950 kHz every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time, or listen live on the Internet via N2SAG or N2IRJ, or listen at your leisure via the mp3 files posted here at http://3950.net every week.

Thanks to W1WCR for running the Liberty Net, and thanks to N2IRJ and N2SAG for giving the net a great online presence.

Yeah, like I implied, it is the only choice we have left, revolution ... and a very scary choice ... many of us will die in restoring rights, freedoms and liberties for our children, and our childrens' children ...
a serious obligation placed upon by our forefathers.

However, if the criminal-treasonous b*st*rds finally get what they deserve, it will be worth it.

Ahh, "separate but equal"; novel concept

The church has nothing to do with it. It is a contract between two people and the state to operate the most elemental form of social unit, a household.

That is a fools fear, they sell it because they make a commission above the price of the worth of the gold ... DUH! Buy some, you will find out. On small quantities you might pay 10% above, fools will even pay more!

If you buy a substantial quantity you can negotiate 1% or even less ... you really need to know, at least a little, about what you are talking

Back in the gold rush, a $20 dollar gold piece would buy you a very nice

I should point out, that 1 Troy OZ., $20 gold coin is still worth the $20 it was back then. You just need a lot of $20 dollar bills, today, to be worth what one was back then ... sorry, that was an IMPORTANT

You have that completely back-arse-wards. Government has no standing in the laws of God. The only valid government will be in compliance with the teachings of Jesus ... I will bow to no man, only to God. Fools who will do different are a dime a dozen ...

And, you are sorrily mistaken. The Constitution guarantees the right to the freedom and practice of religion. If the government wishes to rewrite the bible, it stands at treasonous angles to the laws of this country. Have you read the Constitution? If not, I suggest you do so now ... if you can't understand what it says, ask for help ... ignorance is no excuse to disregard the Constitution.

Why does this newsgroup seem to be composed of in an inordinate number of fools? What is it about electronics which attracts 'em like moths to a flame? Anyone else ever noticed that?

sellers of gold, regardless if they are the salesmen, or owners of the well, gold has never stopped a debasement, depression, recession, nor inflation. in fact, the gold standard is deflationary in nature, and can make a recession, into a depression. its why no country will touch the stuff. cash is king, and in a deflating economy, only fools over

I once owned a Sangean ATS909, a week later I sent it back to C.Crane, Ergo it was no better than my other AM/FM/Shortwave radios.
About twelve years ago, an elderly guy on Chuck Harder's radio show said he sent his Sangean ATS909 radio back because of that plastic.

Son, your ignorance is showing this time, again ...

Read the Book of Revelation, in your bible (Catholic bible has it as the the Apocalypse), Jesus returns as a lion, to slay the wicked and end the evil empires and peoples ... I mean, is there no end to such ignorance?

The call, in Revelation is to be a warrior for God ... not a coward, someone told you wrong ...

Wrong, again ... up until the 1960's, or around there, it was universally known in America, the rule, "A fair days pay for a fair days work." This is no longer so ...

Minimum wage, still in 1970, would buy you about 10 gallons of gas--it was $1.65 p/hr; Gas is now 10x as much. A fair 1 bedroom apartment would run you ~$80.00 a month--utilities included; Today, it would cost you in excess of 10x as much. A nice new car would run you $1,800-$2,000; Today, a car of "equal" value would be 10x as much.

The point to all the above? For minimum wage to have kept up with inflation, minimum would have to be ~$16.50 p/hr.

Now, I believe minimum wage is less than 1/2 of that ... only a fool would attempt to sell, as fact, that wages have kept any where near the rate of inflation. Sell that chit to some fool ... real wages have even suffered worse!

JS

what does that have to do with the price of gold.

yes wages have fallen, it has nothing to do with fiat currency, or gold. it has to do with a rising economic aristocracy.

so. that still does not mean a thing about fiat currencies and gold.

wages are a problem. demand is wage driven, deflation is a lack of demand. as long as wages are not addressed, assets and prices will fall, including gold. gold has nothing to do with wages. i think this stuff is way over your head. no wonder the gold bugs are plundering

Yes 'Special Dave',
The Separation of "Church and State" is about : Separate -but- Equal
* Each Being Separate from the Other
* Each Having The Equal Right To Be Independent of the Other
* Limiting the Power of "The State" To Impose Itself Upon Churches and Religion
* Limiting the Power of "The State" To Impose Itself Upon All Persons-of-Faith
* Up until the 19th Amendment Churches and Persons of Faith Were Really Free in the USA : After that the US Federal Government has use the Charitable Status of Churches to Stifle the Freedom of Speech of Persons of Faith and Religious Organizations.
=WRT= "Separate -but- Equal" Before The Law :
Civil Union Does Just That -wrt- Before The Law Without Imposing "The State" over 'the Churches' and Putting an End To "Freedom of Religion" in the USA.

Again Let Me Repeat Myself : Put a "Freedom of Religion" 'Clause' In Any
"Gay Marriage" Law and I Am For It [A-OK]
-however- Leave It Out and Force Churches to Perform "Gay Marriage" and I Am Against It [.]
Just Say NO to the Tyranny of LGBT 'Gay' Rights
TRUMPING All Other Civilian Rights of Non-LGBTs including "Freedom of Religion" for All Persons of Faith - can i get an 'amen' to that !?!

and that is the way that i see it ~ RHF

Former USAF Official's Press Conference on UFOs & Nukes Options

A group of former Air Force officials held a press conference Monday Sept 27 at the National Press Club - during which they talked about their numerous UFO sightings on military bases with nuclear operations, such as missiles and power plants (see links below to news report & youtube filming of the event).

One of the former USAF officers mentioned that he thinks the UFOs are trying to warn us that we shouldn't have nuclear weapons - that we're 'playing with fire & the whole human race'. Another speaker said that the ruling elite know about the UFOS, but that they are keeping it from the people because they know that when everyone knows, that it will destroy the status quo and that they'll lose their power over the people.

There was also agreement that many of those who talk about UFOs are kooks. Nobody would argue with that. It shows significant success on the part of the ruling elite's disinformation campaign (since 1959) their stated goal: to make all talk about UFOs sound like poppycock.

The space brothers (it is dark propaganda to call them "aliens") are humans like us, only thousands of years more evolved than we are.
Like
Buddha & others, they are totally enlightened & incapable of making the errors that we routinely make.

They solved many of the same problems that confront us now, thousands of years ago and want to help us, but have to wait for an invitation
so far the world governments have been doing all they can to shoo them away!

We can and will end environmental degradation, poverty, & war. That will, as the ruling elite fears - severely upset the status quo, end their power & prestige and shift the power into the hands of the people -- who are presently being treated to a large extent, like cattle.

#1 George Adamski was in touch with the Space Brothers & wrote some books about his encounters. Some of his books can be found online for free (see links below) Here's an excerpt:

"...I wondered if our world was the lowest in development throughout the Universe.

Reading my thought and continuing without interruption, this great teacher said, No, my son, your world is not the lowest in development in the Universe. Yours is the least developed of those in our own system, but out beyond there are some worlds whose peoples have not yet grown to your standard, either socially or scientifically. Also, there are worlds where development has gone far in the field of science and remained low in the field of personal and social understanding, even though space has been conquered.

In our system, the peoples of all planets except your Earth are traveling space freely; some for short distances only, while others achieve great distances that take them to systems beyond our own.

Your understanding of life and the Universe is very limited. As a result, you have many false concepts about other worlds and the composition of the Universe; and so little knowledge of yourselves! But it also is true that there is a growing desire on the part of many on Earth who seek sincerely for greater understanding. We who have traveled the path you now are treading are willing to help and to give of our knowledge to all who will accept it.

The first fact your people must realize is that the inhabitants of other worlds are not fundamentally different from Earth men. The purpose of life on other worlds is basically the same as yours. Inherent in all mankind, however deeply buried it may be, is the yearning to rise to something higher. Your school system on Earth is, in a sense, patterned after the universal progress of life. For in your schools you progress from grade to grade and from school to school, toward a higher and fuller education. In the same way, man progresses from planet to planet, and from system to system toward an ever higher understanding and evolvement in universal growth and service."

..."We could tell you much about the control of gravity, knowledge that is necessary both for safe leaving or approaching any planet. We would gladly give you this knowledge which has served us so well, except that you have not yet learned to live with one another in peace and brotherhood,for the welfare of all men alike, as we have on other worlds. If we revealed this power to you or to any Earth man and it became public knowledge, some of your people would quickly build ships for space traveling, mount guns upon them and go on a shooting spree in an attempt to conquer and take possession of other worlds.

You know that there are certain groups in your world who have already made claim for property rights and possession of your Moon for the purpose of using it as a military base. Many Earth scientists are hoping that, in the not too distant future, they will succeed in building space ships like ours for interplanetary travel. It is entirely possible that this will be done. But Earth men will not be allowed to come in numbers or to remain, until they have learned to embrace the all-inclusive life as lived by people of other worlds, rather than the selfish personal life as found on Earth today. And there will be much for you to learn about outer space, for it is on space itself that you will move.

I recalled a simile I had often used, comparing space to a vast ocean in constant motion. And I thought now that, as our ocean liners move on or through the waves of the ocean, so these interplanetary ships move on the waves of the activity in space.

Yes," the master said, "it is very much like that, and as your scientists work on this principle, more understanding will come to them. For Nature herself will reveal her secrets to all who seek with an open mind.

As you have been told, we travel space in order to learn. Within our ships are many instruments, some of which you have seen, and many others which you have not yet seen. Although on your Earth you have thrown all our craft into the category of Saucers, we have many kinds, many sizes, for many purposes. The largest have never come within the atmosphere of your world. In fact, they have never come within millions of miles of Earth. We cannot risk the lives of the thousands of people traveling in these gigantic ships, for if anything should happen to force a landing on Earth before your people have grown to greater understanding, ours would be in peril.

My son, our main purpose in coming to you at this time is to warn you of the grave danger which threatens men of Earth today. Knowing more than any amongst you can yet realize, we feel it our duty to enlighten you if we can. Your people may accept the knowledge we hope to give them through you and through others, or they can turn deaf ears and destroy themselves. The choice is with the Earth's inhabitants. We cannot dictate.

In your first meeting with our Brother here, he indicated to you that the exploding of bombs on Earth was of interest to us. This is why. Even though the power and radiation from the test explosions have not yet gone out beyond your Earth's sphere of influence, these radiations are endangering the life of men on Earth. A decomposition will set in that, in time, will fill your atmosphere with the deadly elements which your scientists and your military men have confined into what you term 'bombs.

The radiations released from those bombs are now going out only so far, since they are lighter than your own atmosphere and heavier than space itself. If, however, mankind on Earth should release such power against one another in full warfare, a large part of Earth's population could be annihilated, your soil rendered sterile, your waters poisoned and barren to life for many years to come. It is possible that the body of your planet itself could be mutilated to an extent that would destroy her balance in our galaxy.

#2 Excerpt from FAQ with Benjamin Creme on UFOS & the Space Brothers

All the planets, without exception, are inhabited. In my experience, UFOs are absolutely real. They cannot usually be seen by us because their normal state is on the higher etheric, not solid, physical levels. When we do see them, this is because they lower the vibrational rate of the vehicles to come within our vision, as a temporary manifestation...They help us in many ways and without them this earth would be a very painful place indeed. They mop up a great deal of the nuclear radiation which we release into the atmosphere through nuclear experimentation. Even if a test is underground, contaminated, poisoned dust flies up into the atmosphere. The space beings have 'implosion' devices which neutralize this nuclear radiation. Without their assistance our rivers and streams would be undrinkable; we would, literally, be dying... Without their help we would be in a very sad state...Their intention is totally beneficial

...All [esoteric] Hierarchies of all the planets in this system [highly evolved Masters/Buddhas of Wisdom] are in touch with each other, and everything that takes place in an extra-terrestrial sense takes place under Law...

...Their technology is thousands of years ahead of ours at the present time... All the planets, without exception, are inhabited. In my experience, UFOs are absolutely real. They cannot usually be seen by us because their normal state is on the higher etheric, not solid, physical levels. When we do see them, this is because they lower the vibrational rate of the vehicles to come within our vision, as a temporary manifestation... Without their assistance our rivers and streams would be undrinkable; we would, literally, be dying... Without their help we would be in a very sad state..." Benjamin Creme -

#3 People have been working on this project for over a hundred years...

"The return to the everyday world of Maitreya, the World Teacher for the New Age, and the Masters of Wisdom – the Elder Brothers of humanity – is an ongoing process for which humanity has been prepared since 1875 by the Ageless Wisdom teachings. In various stages, these teachings have been released in many publications, notably those of H.P. Blavatsky, Alice A. Bailey, the Agni Yoga series, and most recently the books by Benjamin Creme

This online catalogue and library presents the evidence of the Great Approach, as the Masters call Their return, by combining the historical and bibliographical details for these and other publications with information from Benjamin Creme's writings and other relevant sources. In doing so it shows the continuity and consistency in the teachings of the Masters of Wisdom, as given over the past 130-odd years, presenting the wide variety of teachings as they cater to students of different levels, backgrounds and dispositions.

But Gold Itself Has NOT Collapsed : Just the

Currency exists as a medium to easily and readily

Gold Can Be Something of Value provided that

Would You Sell :

Portable radios were all made of very light materials. Very few had Whenever gold has no value, only food, shelter, water, clothes, etc. will continue to have value. But as soon as their is a desire for money, gold is king. Not only that, but you can bury gold for an eternity and dig it back up and spend it. Paper money will deteriorate rather quickly ... again, gold is king.

But, I suspect you waste your time ... this idiot only argues for the sake of "being right" ... it has no bearing on if what he says is even close to correct, or not.

Aluminum is just not that expensive. Aluminum is even easy to cast and machine. And, I for one, would pay the additional cost of having a metal cabinet ... but we remain stuck with plastic junk ... I have gotten rid of all my old metal radios, the old tubers and transistor rigs. I miss the cabinets though ... I am surprised China doesn't catch on that a radio in an aluminum cabinet would take the country by storm. They, certainly, could manufacture it cheap enough.

explain away the private sector screwing people over gold. gold is a

Back to the '30s: how the GOP uses Nazi techniques to rally the mob

Instead of Der Angriff and the Völkischer Beobachter we have FOX News and World Net Daily. Instead of Joseph Goebbels and Alfred Rosenberg we have Rupert Murdoch and Joseph Farah. These media outlets spout anti- liberalism as vociferously and viciously as any NSDAP propa ganda organ. Like the party ideologues noted above, they employ ad hominem attacks in place of cogent analysis and prefer name- calling to actual news.
Murdoch, Farah and their minions take street- fighting techniques in front of minions through use of glossy modern technology. Witness, for example, Glenn Beck and Rush Limbaugh went on the attacked Sen. Mary Landrieu (D- LA) for her stance on the healthcare debate in the Senate. But they did not critique her position based on its merits, and by offering a cogent counter- argument. Instead, both called a female US senator a prostitute (The Rush Limbaugh Show November 23 2009 and The Glenn Beck Program November 23,2009). This sort of attack is commonplace and differs not at all from the tactics used by the National Socialist Press in the 20's and 30's.
• Glenn Beck listed people he'd like to "beat to death with a shovel." In 2001, Beck enumerated the various people that he "would want to kill with a shovel," or "line up" and "shoot … in the head," including Rep. Charles Rangel (D- NY). (Glenn Beck Program, 3/ 9/ 01)
• The Republican Tea- Party mobs embrace this principle.
Ideological rhetoric backs it up: We see for example from Ann Coulter, Vester: You say you'd rather not talk to liberals at all? Coulter: I think a baseball bat is the most effective way these days. (FOX News Channel, DaySide with Linda Vester, 10/ 6)

• “Would you kill someone for that?…I’m thinking about killing Michael Moore…I could kill him myself, or if I would need to hire somebody to do it,… No, I think I could. I think he could be looking me in the eye, you know, and I could just be choking the life out. Is this wrong? I stopped wearing my What Would Jesus — band — Do, and I’ve lost all sense of right and wrong now. I used to be able to say, ‘Yeah, I’d kill Michael Moore,’ and then I’d see the lit tle band: What Would Jesus Do? And then I’d realize, ‘Oh, you wouldn’t kill Michael Moore. Or at least you wouldn’t choke him to death.’ And you know, well, I’m not sure.” (Glenn Beck Program, 5/ 17/ 05)
• Beck, joking about poisoning Nancy Pelosi: “So, Speaker Pelosi, I just wanted to — you gonna drink your wine? Are you blind? Do those eyes not work? There you — I want you to drink it now. Drink it. Drink it. Drink it… By the way, I put poison in your —” (Glenn Beck Program, 8/ 6/ 09)
• Bill O’Reilly, of people who criticize him, The Radio Fac tor, September 27, 2007: “You know, look, if I could strangle these people and not go to hell and get executed, I would, but I can’t.”
• Bill O’Reilly — radio show, Sept. 14, 2005: “I just wish Kat rina had only hit the United Nations building, nothing else, just had flooded them out, and I wouldn’t have rescued them.”
• Rush Limbaugh October 20, 2009, The Rush Limbaugh Show: “This guy from The New York Times, if he really thinks that humanity is destroying the planet, humanity is destroying the climate, that human beings in their natural existence are going to cause the extinction of life on Earth — Andrew Revkin. Mr. Revkin, why don’t you just go kill yourself and help the planet by dying?”
• Right Wing blogger Roger Erickson March 31, 2009: “At what point do the people tell the politicians to go to hell? At what point do they get off the couch, march down to their state legislator’s house, pull him outside, and beat him to a bloody pulp for being an idiot?”

Part 2: Liberal/Jewish Media and Right Wing Propaganda. This is the second installment of a detailed examination of the parallels between the Nazi movement in Germany and the new Republican methodology since the election of Obama. Also see parts 1, 3, 4, and 5.

Now that we’ve examined the street-level thuggery in Part One, let’s look at some examples of how the Republican “elite” work.

NSDAP and GOP: Two Medias; One Tactic
Everyone is familiar by now with the Right-wing rhetoric concerning the “liberal media elite.” Personal responsibility goes right out the window if you can just blame the other guy for lying about you. Again we see a striking similarity between the National Socialists and the Republicans – fix blame, and then accuse them of controlling the media. The two seem to go hand-in-hand.
“Barack Obama only won because the media favored him and unfairly denigrated the abilities and accomplishments of John McCain and Sarah Palin.” We’ve heard this before, of course. It probably won’t surprise you to know where:

Hitler, July 5, 1942, “New agencies all the world over…are for the most part in the hands of Jews.”1
If you substitute “liberal” for “Jew” you have the same language. Again, the liberals, like the Jews, are guilty of “fabrications”:
Sarah Palin, June 3, 2009, Anchorage: Palin spoke of “the entrenched bureaucrats and the elite self-proclaimed intellectuals, and the smug lobbyists who dominate Washington, and the liberal media that is imposing its will on Washington, embracing that status quo, that business as usual…” 2
This is the same language Hitler used of the “Jewish intellectuals” and communists who dominated Weimar government. As an aside, she was displaying typical intellectual dishonesty by lifting much of her speech from “an article written four years ago by Newt Gingrich and Craig Shirley without attribution.”3
The Conservapedia echoes Hitler: “The Liberal media elite is the clique of highly paid, left-leaning executives and journalists who directly control most output of the main newspapers and broadcasting organizations.”4
The media is in the hands of the Jews (communists)! The media is in the hands of the liberals (communists)! I don’t have to make this stuff up. This is like shooting ducks in a pond or fishing with a hand grenade.
If that is not enough, surely you remember the Nazi (mis)use of the press. The National Socialist media became an outlet not for news, but for propaganda. There is the most famous newspaper owner of all, Joseph Goebbels and his paper Der Angriff (The Attack – aptly named). Then there is the Völkischer Beobachter (Folkish [Ethnic] Observer) edited first by Dietrich Eckart, an infamous “Jew-baiter”, then by crank-ideologist Alfred Rosenberg.

Today, media has moved on to television and the Internet. Instead of Der Angriff and the Völkischer Beobachter we have FOX News and World Net Daily. Instead of Joseph Goebbels and Alfred Rosenberg we have Rupert Murdoch and Joseph Farah. These media outlets spout anti-liberalism as vociferously and viciously as any NSDAP propaganda organ. Like the party ideologues noted above, they employ ad hominem attacks in place of cogent analysis and prefer name-calling to actual news.
Murdoch, Farah and their minions take street-fighting techniques in front of minions through use of glossy modern technology.
Witness, for example, Glenn Beck and Rush Limbaugh went on the attacked Sen. Mary Landrieu (D-LA) for her stance on the healthcare debate in the Senate. But they did not critique her position based on its merits, and by offering a cogent counter-argument. Instead, both called a female US senator a prostitute (The Rush Limbaugh Show November 23 2009 and The Glenn Beck Program November 23,2009).
This sort of attack is commonplace and differs not at all from the tactics used by the National Socialist Press in the 20’s and 30’s.

Vilification is the order of the day. Analysis of the facts, when it takes place at all, comes in a distant second. As Media Matters for America reports, Under its president, Roger Ailes, Fox News routinely employs racially charged appeals to foment opposition to the Obama administration and other progressive figures, such as Glenn Beck's comments that President Obama is a "racist" and "has a deep-seated hatred for white people or the white culture." Before launching the Fox News Channel, Ailes worked as a media consultant for several Republican campaigns where evidence shows he similarly appealed to racial fears and biases for political gain, and as executive producer for Rush Limbaugh's television show, during which Limbaugh made several controversial statements.5

And of course, just as National Socialist ideologues and leaders motivated the mob, so do Republican ideologues. As I noted above, Republican objections are not generally issued as cogent and well-thought-out rebuttals of liberal positions but as ad hominem attacks, character assassinations, and even suggested violence. This is true not only of the rank-and-file but of the leadership, the party ideologues, as can be seen from the examples below.
• Glenn Beck listed people he'd like to "beat to death with a shovel." In 2001, Beck enumerated the various people that he "would want to kill with a shovel," or "line up" and "shoot … in the head," including Rep. Charles Rangel (D-NY). (Glenn Beck Program, 3/9/01)

• Beck, joking about poisoning Nancy Pelosi: "So, Speaker Pelosi, I just wanted to — you gonna drink your wine? Are you blind? Do those eyes not work? There you — I want you to drink it now. Drink it. Drink it. Drink it… By the way, I put poison in your —" (Glenn Beck Program, 8/6/09)

What Fascism Is & Isn't

No other word causes so much misunderstanding, confusion, and heated debate in politics than fascism. The term has been applied to many individuals such as McCarthy, Hoover, and others. It is frequently used to describe government policies and government themselves, often incorrectly. What then is fascism exactly? Webster's Dictionary defines it as: "A government system marked by a centralized dictatorship, stringent socioeconomic controls and belligerent nationalism." But the author takes exception with that definition. At best, the definition is vague and abstract. Nor does the definition seem capable of taking into all forms of fascism.
There is a resurgent, widespread attempt by the far right to label fascism as a form of socialism. Fredrick von Hayek was the first to attempt labeling the Nazis as socialists in his book The Road to Serfdom published in 1944.70 The hard right quickly adopted it, as it allowed the hard right to escape the charges that they had much in common with the Nazis.2 Such endeavors are not only silly, but dishonest as well and represent an attempt by the far right to distance themselves for their earlier support of Hitler.
Hayek's book is based on two erroneous assumptions from the very beginning. He first assumes that fascism and communism are one and the same, as they are both totalitarian systems. This makes about as much sense as calling a maple tree a pine tree because both are trees. His second erroneous assumption lays in his belief that only socialism or liberalism leads to totalitarian systems. In fact, all political systems can lead to totalitarian systems and all political systems are inherently unstable, as is any system created by man.
From there, Hayek takes severe liberties with history. For instance, he goes on to claim that by deliberate policy the United States by allowed the growth of cartels and syndicates after 1878.71 Indeed this date and time period is significant, but not for a move towards socialism or liberalism. Rather, it's the opposite a move towards fascism and corporate rule. Even a reader with a rudimentary knowledge of American history would recognize this time frame as the beginning of the robber baron era and laissez faire economics, precisely the type of economic policy Hayek holds in utmost esteem.

Hayek offers little proof to support his conclusions; in fact the book is devoid of any proof or even examples to support his findings. The book degenerates into an argument based upon unsubstantiated assertion. He argues against the nation state and proposes a supernational authority or world federation made up of the financial elite. In essence, Hayek proposes a world made up of sovereign corporations accountable to no one. Not only did Hayek take severe liberties with American history, he ignored the very nature of fascism in Germany and Italy.
In various speeches made shortly after the March on Rome, Mussolini stated, "We must take from state authority those functions for which it is incompetent and which it performs badly... I believe the state should renounce its economic functions, especially those carried out through monopolies, because the state is incompetent in such matters... We must put an end to state railways, state postal service and state insurance." The state returned large monopolies to the private sector after returning them to profitability such as the Consortium of Match Manufactures, privatized the insurance system in 1923, the telephone system in 1925, and many of the public works.
In Germany the Nazis announced they would end nationalization of private industries when they seized power. In 1932, Hitler returned control of the Gelsenkirhen company to private hands and in 1936 returned the stock of "United Steel" to private hands. Throughout 1933-1936, the Nazi returned to private hands the control of several banks: Dresdner, Danat, Commerz and Privatbank, the Deutsche Bank, and several others. In 1936, the steamship company Deutcher Schiff and Maschinenbau was returned to the private sector. In 1934, Dr. Schacht, the Nazi Minister of Economy, gave instructions to hasten the privatization of municipal enterprises. These enterprises were especially coveted by the rich industrialists, as they had been prosperous even during the depression.
Both in fascist Italy and Nazi Germany, the tax system was changed to one favoring business and the wealthy. The Nazis allowed industries to deduct from their taxable income all sums used to purchase new equipment. Rich families employing a maid were allowed to count the maid as a dependent child and reap the tax benefit. In Italy, the Minister of Finance stated: "We have broken with the practice of persecuting capital."73
Such programs, catering to big business and the rich elite, are more akin to the policies of the Reagan Administration than it is to any liberal administration including FDR's. Likewise, it was the rich industrialists that were behind the fascist movement in the United States during the 1930s. Thus it is no surprise that the right wing attempts to try and label fascism as socialism in trying to distance themselves from their previous support of fascism.
Perhaps the only redeeming feature in Hayek's book is his acknowledgement of environmental problems.72 Indeed this is significant, considering the book was first published in the 1940s, long before the birth of the environmental movement. Hayek readily acknowledges the problem of industrial pollution and the harmful effects of deforestation, yet he stops short of any meaningful solution. Instead of offering a viable solution Hayek condemns government regulation and would allow market forces to provide the solution. However, it was these same market forces that produced the problem. We have plenty of proof of such a fool hearty approach both here and globally. As late as the 1970s rivers caught fire in the United States, cities were smog stricken and harmful pollutants were damaging the environment world wide. Today we face the problems of global warming and ozone depletion, and the problem of environmental estrogens, which has the potential of being even more threatening than both global warming and ozone depletion.

But perhaps the most damning of all evidence that Hayek was dead wrong comes from the implementation of an economic system based on his beliefs. Hayek later taught at the University of Chicago, the same university that trained the "Boys from Chicago" who were the economic brains behind the fascist regime of Pinochet in Chile. There is no question in the matter that under Pinochet, Chile was indeed fascist. More alarming, Hayek is an idol to several top-level officials in the George W. Bush administration. They are dangerous close to imposing a fascist style economy on the United States.

In order to dispel the myth of the Nazis being socialists we need to first define socialism. Socialism is rigidly defined as an economic system in which the workers own the means of production and distribution of goods. A more relaxed definition would be simply that the workers maintain political control over the production and distribution of goods. Even using the more relaxed definition of socialism, the Nazis can not be labeled as socialists as there simply was no worker control over the production or distribution of goods in Nazi Germany. In fact, the Nazis outlawed legitimate labor unions. In place of the original unions, the Nazis implemented quasi-like unions that were controlled by the industrialists. In a déjà vu manner, the Republican Party has recently tried to enact a similar measure, conferring legal status on worker groups controlled by corporations. Some writers and historians have argued that you cannot have fascism without corporatism, as the corporate power structure has much in common with fascism. During the period preceding the outbreak of WWII it was common to refer to fascism as corporatism in polite English society.

More recently others have tried to define fascism as the "Third Way", in the sense that it borrowed ideas from both capitalism and socialism. The basic philosophy behind the "Third Way" incorrectly labels any regulations or government controls over businesses as socialism; essentially it's just a restatement of syndicalism. Such nonsense should be rejected whole heartily. It again represents an attempt to distance the right from their support of Hitler in the 1930s and ignores that the basis of the German economy under Hitler was a capitalist system where the means of production remained in private hands. Further, following the logic of the "Third Way," one would have to label all capitalistic systems as "Third Way," for throughout history there has never been a pure capitalistic system. A pure capitalist economy is so inherently and fatally flawed that it's never even been tried. But that is to be expected for any system that awards the winner with all the eggs. Nor has there been a pure socialistic system. Human greed simply prevents it.

The dangers of such nonsense can be illustrated with the following quote taken from a Baptists fundamentalist's web page in their labeling of the Japanese economy as fascist: However, Fascism is an economic term, denoting the type of economy where the Means of Production [factories, companies] and the ownership of raw materials [mines, oil wells] remains in the hands of private individuals, but where the government intervenes to determine how many competitors will be allowed to produce the same thing, how much is produced, and what prices may be charged.1

Here it can be seen that the term fascism has been clearly misapplied. This description could past for the economic theory of the fascist philosopher George Sorel. This is a description of syndicalism; it was the economic model of fascist Italy and Nazi Germany to a large extent. Syndicalism does draw some aspects from socialism, but the system is still a capitalistic system as ownership of the means of production and distribution of goods remain in private hands. It is no more socialism than the conclusion of the Robber Barons and the corrupt politicians of Tammy Hall. The only difference between this example of syndicalism is that the government participation is open versus the backroom corruption of politicians in Tammy Hall.

Not only Japan invoke syndicalism, but almost all the Pacific Rim nations do, to some extent. These are the same nations that the hard right has held up in the past as darlings of capitalism and free enterprise. Yet these are precisely the same economic policies of the Nazis that they have tried to foist off as socialism. The key distinction here is the means of production still remains in private hands, just as it did in Nazi Germany. No capitalistic society has ever existed without some form of syndicalism or government control over the economy. The closest America came to an entirely capitalistic system was either the 1890s and the Robber Barons or the laissez faire policies of Herbert Hoover, and as we all know, that didn't end too well in the Great Depression of the 1930s.

No where does the quote above refer to totalitarian control or extreme nationalism. In fact, they have tried to define fascism in strictly economic terms for their own purposes. But it does serve to point out the dangers of inventing the "Third Way" or the use of syndicalism in an attempt to label the Nazis. The problem here is determining where syndicalism ends and capitalism begins. Is the trading of pollution credits a form of syndicalism or is it free enterprise? In America today, the hard right would attempt to label it as socialism, as they try to do with any laws or regulations of business. In fact, the past laws regulating corporations were much more severe and restrictive in the 1800s than today. One could argue that it was through syndicalism that the power elite and corporations gradually eroded those laws until corporations now enjoy more freedoms than what an individual enjoys. This is precisely what has happened in America.

But environmental and labor laws are not socialism. They are in fact nothing more than an attempt to bring an out of control system hell bent on exploitation of the environment and labor back to order. No labor law or environment law was ever passed in a vacuum. All of these laws were brought about by a need to correct an unhealthy or unsafe situation. While there are some corporations that strive to provide a clean and safe workplace, there are many whose only concern is the bottom line and they turn a blind eye towards safety and view their employees as expendable commodities.
Regulation of businesses or corporations by itself is not socialism. A business entity such as a corporation has no rights other than what privileges a society wishes to grant it. People have rights; a paper creation of a society such as a corporation has no inherent rights. Business entities such as corporations only have conditional privileges based upon providing for the common good of the society, which granted the charter. All such paper creations have an obligation to serve the society, which created it. Failing to perform that obligation, it loses any right for its continuing existence. It the obligation of that society to restrict the rights of such entities to promote equality for all and to prevent a ruling aristocracy from developing. This view is hardly socialism or even radical, unless one wishes to label Thomas Jefferson as a radical socialist as he more eloquently stated it:
"I hope we shall take warning from the example of England and crush in its birth the aristocracy of our moneyed corporations which dare already to challenge our Government to trial, and bid defiance to the laws of our country."3 Perhaps one of the better definitions of fascism comes from Heywood Broun, a noted American columnist in the 1930s:
"Fascism, is a dictatorship from the extreme right or to put it a little more closely into our local idiom, a government which is run by a small group of large industrialists and financial lords...I think it is not unfair to say that any businessman in America, or public leader, who goes out to break unions is laying the foundations for fascism"75

A definitive definition of fascism is a totalitarian government with extreme nationalist tendencies in which the government is controlled and operated for the benefit of a few elite. However, it should be noted that an all-encompassing definition of a complex system can not be simply stated. Such simple definitions undoubtedly fail in time. A caveat to the above definition would be anytime the government places the rights of corporations or the elite above the rights of the citizens, it represents a step towards fascism. A better insight into what fascism is can be obtained by listing the traits that are common to the classical fascist states of Franco's Spain, Nazi Germany and fascist Italy. A list of traits of fascism is presented below. Note that the first two are the two most defining traits, obviously many of the others can be applied to many other social-political systems as one moves down the list.

1. Totalitarian
2. Extreme nationalism
3. Top down revolution or movement
4. Destructive divisionism such as racism and class warfare
5. Extreme anti-communism, anti socialism, and anti-liberal views
6. Extreme exploitation
7. Opportunistic ideology lacking in consistency as a means to grab power
8. Unbridled Corporatism
9. Reactionary
10. The use of violence and terror to attain and maintain power
11. Cult-like figurehead
12. The expounding of mysticism or religious beliefs

Not all fascists need exhibit all of the traits once again it should be emphasized that all fascist states will exhibit a totalitarian view. Most fascist states will have an extreme nationalism policy. However, extreme nationalism is not mandatory. States such as Spain under Franco and Chile under Pinochet were indeed fascist states, but they could hardly be described as having a policy of extreme nationalism.

A brief look at the above traits and how they relate to fascism will convey a better understanding of what fascism really is, using Nazi Germany as an example. First, because it was undisputedly fascist and secondly because there is more literature available on the Nazis than on either fascist Italy or Franco's Spain. Moreover, the use of the Nazi's as an example is closer to the focus of this book, which is creeping fascism in America.

Creeping fascism is the gradual lost of freedoms of the masses to the power elite. Full-blown fascism has never appeared all at once. The Nazis took several years to reach the final state of full-blown fascism. It took the Nazis five years before Kristallnacht, which marks the beginning of the "Final Solution." The Nazis gradually took away the freedoms of the citizens of Germany until they were able to launch the Holocaust. This was the reason for including the caveat in the definition of fascism above, "Any action taken by the government that places the rights of the elites and corporations above the citizens is a step towards fascism."

Such actions will not look like fascism some may even appear to be reasonable. Its only when the summation of many such actions ends in a fascist state that such actions can be seen as a step towards fascism. Make no mistake in understanding that the power elite, those that own and run America's corporations, are fascist. They have forced war on this country to protect their assets, they have over-exploited their employees, they have used violence to bust unions, and they rely on divisionist policies such as racism and class warfare to maintain their power.

The erosion of our freedoms in the United States was prolonged by our constitution. Nevertheless, over time the lost of freedoms has left America at the edge of a chasm. Any further loss of freedoms and America will begin an irreversible slide into the deep abyss of fascism.

Before looking at the traits of fascism a brief review of the history of fascism and its roots in modern philosophy is needed. By looking at the roots of fascism in philosophy, we can gain an understanding why fascism is often described as reactionary. By looking at the various philosophers that have come to be associated with fascism, we will be able to see that many of these traits come directly from fascism's roots in philosophy. In that way, we can then see how some of these traits that can be applied to other social-political system are central to fascism.

Many writers have assumed that fascism has no intellectual or philosophical roots due to its lack of a consistent ideology. But such views are incorrect; the roots of fascism extend back to the French Revolution. The French Revolution is one of those landmark events in the history of Europe marking the beginning of a major shift in European culture and governments. In essence, fascism was a reaction to the French revolution. It was a reaction particularly to the slogan of the revolution of "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity" that was hated the most.

The concept of liberty from oppressive regimes in the daily lives of the citizens, including forced religious values, and the concept of voting and majority rule where the minority still retained a set of inalienable rights, incensed the early philosophers of fascism. Such a concept was a direct threat to the kings and nobles of the time, as well as to the church. Remember this was a time for debtor's prisons, indentured servants, and vassal states.

Equality, in the eyes of the law, was unspeakable. How could a mere peasant have the same rights under the law as the kings, nobles, and merchants? This was the time when the king's word was the law. Rights were based on the social standing of one's birth. The only rights a person had at the time were the rights that the king was willing to extend, and they could be withdrawn at any moment.

Fraternity, in the sense that all men and women shared humanity was considered heresy. It was a time when slaves were still considered and treated as animals and women were considered property, and not part of a greater humanity that needed to be shared.

All three terms meant a loss in power and control by those in power. But, this is exactly what the philosophers that have come to be associated with fascism were reacting to and rejecting. The period following the French Revolution produced a virtual intellectual stew of various philosophies, including those of Marx and Engels. A brief look at some of the major philosophers of fascism will show how they relate to the traits listed early, and how they were a reaction to the French Revolution. This list of philosophers is by no means complete, but it will suffice to show that many of the traits attributed to fascism above have roots going back as far as the French Revolution.

Arthur Schopenhauer (1788-1860) was a German philosopher perhaps best known for his The World as Will and Representation.4 His beliefs held that the will is the underlying and ultimate reality. The whole phenomenal world was only the expression of will. Individuals have free will only in the sense that everyone is an expression of a will. Thus we are not authors of our own destiny, character, or behavior, according to Schopenhauer. His views parallel the development of relativistic physics that came a century later. His views were influential on Nietzche, among others.

Georg Hegel (1770-1831), a German philosopher held pantheism as the heart of his beliefs. The Phenomenology of Spirit and Science of Logic are two of his better-known works. He viewed that all existence and all history was divine and that nature was sacred. He viewed God as an absolute spirit that also manifested itself in material things and individuals. He believed God acted through humans and embodied himself first in nature, then in the rising stages of human consciousness and civilization. He also had an ethnocentric and egocentric view. He maintained that the German nation was the highest carrier of the wave of God's development. He believed that the bureaucratic monarchy of Prussia was the highest form of state. These later views were certainly manifested in the Nazi's view of the Aryan race, as shown in the following quote.

"Thus the highest purpose of the folkish state is concern for the preservation of those original racial elements which bestow culture and create the beauty and dignity of a higher mankind. We, as Aryans, can conceive of the state only as the living organism of a nationality which not only assures the preservation of this nationality, but by the development of its spiritual and ideal abilities leads it to the highest freedoms."8

Fredrich Nietzche (1844-1900), also a German philosopher was best known for his work Thus Spake Zarathustra.5 Hitler liked to be photographed staring at a bust of Nietzche. Nietzche theorized two sets of morals, one for the ruling class and another for the slave class. Nietzche viewed that ancient empires grew out of the ruling class and that religions arose out of the slave classes, (which denigrates the rich, the powerful, rationalism, and sexuality.) He developed a concept of an "overman," a superhuman, which symbolized man at his most creative and highest intellectual development. Obviously, the "overman" was manifested in the Nazi's view of the Aryan race. He suffered a mental break down, most likely from the advances of syphilis, and was cared for by his mother and later his sister, Elisabeth. His sister painstakingly gathered his notes to publish his latter works. However, she was active in the rising anti-Semitic movement at the time and may have tainted his later work with her views. From time to time, Nietzsche enjoys a rebirth of popularity. Today is one such rebirth, fitting in well with the unmitigated greed and corporatism of today's hard right. Nietzsche's connection to the Nazis is obvious, as shown by the following quotation.

"with satanic joy in his face, the black haired Jewish youth lurks in wait for the unsuspecting girl whom he defiles with his blood, thus stealing her from her people. With every means he tries to destroy the racial foundations of the people he has set out to subjugate. Just as he himself systematically ruins women and girls, he does not shrink back from pulling down the blood barriers for others, even on a large scale. It was and it is Jews who bring Negroes into the Rhineland, always with the same secret thought and clear aim of ruining the hated white race by necessarily resulting bastardization, throwing it down from its culture and political height, and himself rising to be master."9

Notice the similarity in this passage and the Council of Conservative Citizens that Senator Lott and representative Barr supported before becoming embroiled in the resulting scandal in late 1998.10 The web site for this white supremacist group described interracial marriage to the mixing of chocolate milk with plain milk, and labeled it as a path to racial extinction. They also described Lincoln as a communist. 11

Henri Bergson (1859-1941) was a French philosopher with a Jewish father and an English mother. He was the winner of the Nobel Prize for literature in 1927. He rejected the idea that scientific principles could explain all existence. He was a promoter of what has become known as Social Darwinism.6 Perhaps one of his better known works was Time and Free Will. He was also a believer in pantheism. Once again, we see the obvious connection with the Nazis of a master race in the following quote concerning the Nazi's euthanasia program:

"...a secret circular went out from the Reich interior Ministry which marked the beginning of a programme of euthanasia for mentally ill or deformed children up to three years old. Doctors would be required to report all such cases to the health authority on special forms; the forms would then be forwarded to a panel of three medical assessors who would adjucate over life or death by appending "-" or "+." Should all three place a "+", a euthanasia warrant would be issued, signed by the Reichsleiter Philipp Bouhler of the Fuhrer's Chancellery or SS_Oberfuhrer Dr Viktor Brack, head of the Chancellery's Euthanasia Department II. And so it happened: infants marked for death were transferred to what were referred to as Children's Special Departments in political reliable clinics, there to be given a "mercy death" by injection or in one institution at Eglfing-Haar simply starved by a progressive reduction of diet."7

Geroge Sorel (1847-1922) was a French philosopher who had considerable influence on Mussolini. His writings promoted an economic model based on syndicalism. He also believed in the degeneration of societies and believed that social decay could only be delayed by idealists who were willing to use violence to obtain power. His views were extremely anti-democratic and anti-liberal.

With this very brief review of philosophy has shown that the fascist traits of nationalism, totalitarian, racist, violence, unbridled corporatism, reactionary, and the top down nature of fascism all are grounded in the works of past philosophers.

A totalitarian government is one that seeks to maintain control over all aspects of public and private life by using propaganda, terror, and technology. Totalitarian regimes seek control over political, social, and the culture. However, economic control is left in the hands of a few elites in the fascist state. While the means of economic control is left in the private hands of a few elites, this same group controls the government. In essence the government becomes the tool by which the rich and the corporations maintain control. The distinction is important to note as it separates communism from fascism. In a communist state the control over the economy moves to the inside of government, while in the fascist state it remains in private hands. Dictatorships differ in seeking only limited control over the political environment of a society.

There was only limited government ownership under the Nazis. Prior to the Nazi take over, the German governments took over failing businesses and continued to operate them. When the Nazis took over the government already owned a large number of enterprises. When the Nazis took over they began to privatize many of these businesses, especially the ones that had remained profitable during the depression like the electric utilities.
Once Hitler assured big business that they would be free to continue to operate, they failed to raise any further objections to the Nazis. The large German steel and coal industries especially welcomed the Nazis. Hitler's plans for rearmament meant large contracts for new ships, tanks, etc. Later during the war when a labor shortage appeared, it was Krupp from the German steel industry that first raised the question of using slave labor from the concentration camps. At first the Nazis were reluctant to allow the inmates to be used as slaves as it would slow the progress of the "final solution." However, once Krupp offered to pay for the slaves the Nazis readily agreed and soon there was no shortage of companies seeking slaves.

What is less understood about the totalitarian power Hitler achieved was the path he took to obtain that power. There never has been totalitarian regime that gained instant total control. Such a sudden change would spawn sudden revolutions. Mussolini took three years before consolidating his power in Italy. In case of the Nazis, it took even longer. Nor did the path to totalitarian Nazi state start with the elevation of Hitler to the position of chancellor. Some historians trace the roots of the path all the way back into the 1800s. A complete analysis of German history from the time of the monarchy to the seating of Hitler is beyond the scope of this book, if not beyond the scope of any single book, as volumes could be written. What follows is a very brief look at the slow erosion of freedom and the concentration of power as it relates to the final totalitarian state.
For the most part, the period following WWI was a period dominated by raucous politics and a series of crisis in Germany. The two periods in which the Nazis gained the most strength was the early 1920s, during the hyper inflationary period, culminating with the Beer Hall Putsch and the depression of 1929-1931. There is little need to examine the raucous politics of that period, everyone is well aware of Hitler's SA thugs breaking up political rallies of other parties which also resorted to the same tactics. It would not be untrue to describe many political rallies of the time as ending in brawls.

Hitler and the Nazis were extremists, and mostly rejected by the German voters during the good economic times of the 1920s. For example, in 1928 they only polled 2.6 percent of the vote, gaining just 14 seats out of the 491 seats in the Reichstag by virtue of the republic's proportional representation. By 1930 and the start of the depression, the Nazis had increased their seats to 107 out of 577 seats in the Reichstag. In the July 1932 election, at the height of the depression, the Nazis polled 37.4 percent of the vote winning 230 seats in the Reichstag, becoming Germany's largest party.13 In the Nov 1932 election, they only won 196 seats as an anemic economic recovery was already underway, the people began rejecting the Nazis and their radical views and actions.
Germany's plunge into a totalitarian state began before the Nazis took over. It was as much a result of a lack of a strong leadership as anything else. For the first eleven years of the German Republic there had been seventeen cabinets headed by nine different chancellors.12 Undoubtedly, the country faced grave crisis in this period such as hyperinflation, but the lack of strong leadership and an increased polarization was readily apparent. The Nazis were the most notorious radicals unwilling to compromise, but the other parties have to share some of the blame for this polarization as well. The blame can be extended beyond the parties to the vested interests behind each party, including that of big businesses. Fracturing the electorate by polarization was playing right into the divisionist character of the Nazis, whose radical program lacked a broad base of support as the election results from 1928 showed.
The policies of the German governments during the 1920s inadvertently aided the rise of the Nazis. Throughout the 1920s the government arrested many of the leaders from the left. It would not be unfair to term these arrests as purges. The arrest of any strong leaders emerging from the left only served to further polarize the country by creating a vacuum on the left that was only filled with the more radical communists. A similar situation is emerging in the United States, throughout this century the United States has conducted purges of the left: the Great Red Scare of 1919, McCartyism of the 1950s, and COINTELPRO operations during the sixties. Without the voices from the left to moderate policy, the political center in the United States has shifted to the hard right.
The immediate result in the lack of strong leadership is frequent chances in government, which only lead to more instability and chaos. An ideal parallel is the long string one term Presidents ending with Lincoln and the Civil War. The polarization of the Unite States gradually increased from about 1820 on resulting in one term presidents. Another string of one term Presidents ended with the election of Roosevelt in the middle of the Great Depression. In both U.S. case the ending result was not pleasant: a civil war and a depression.

Such frequent change in government does not allow businesses to make long range plans, nor does it allow for enough to time for programs enacted by a government to work. These effects then act as negative feedback, further increasing the polarization and the resulting chaos.
Additionally, the German constitution was flawed and did not account for a negative parliament. Power in Germany was concentrated in the office of the president, headed by Hindenburg, who initially had been elected by conservatives and reactionary rightists. He was a member of the aristocratics from the Junker class and had been a war hero; he likewise held sentiments for the monarchy. The president had the power to appoint cabinets and chancellors. Beginning in 1930, Hindenburg began the practice of appointing chancellors of his choice that were not beholding to the parliament. To allow the chancellors to circumvent parliament, he granted these chancellors emergency powers that had been given to the president by the constitution. Starting in 1930, almost all national laws, including the power to tax, were enacted by presidential decrees and not by the parliament. Such presidential decrees would be similar to the executive orders in the United States.
Hence, even before Hitler was appointed to the chancellor position, power was being concentrated into the two offices of the chancellor and the president. At least twice before appointing Hitler as chancellor, Hindenburg entertained ideas of violating the constitution by not holding elections within the sixty days as required by the constitution.
Hindenburg had also avoided appoint Hitler as chancellor twice before January 1933. Even with the support of big business Hindeburg failed to appoint Hitler when the Nazis held more seats in the Reichstag than any other party.
It wasn't until after Hitler met in secret with von Pappen at the Cologne home of Baron Kurt von Schroder that Hindenburg would relent and appoint Hitler chancellor. The baron was the head of the international Schroder banking empire and had previously raised funds to pay off the Nazi's debt.
The secret meeting on January 4, 1933 allowed Hitler and von Pappen to work out their differences and to agree to a new cabinet under the direction of both. This secret meeting was the birthplace of the Third Reich.
However, there were two Americans that also were in attendance: John Foster Dulles and his brother Allen. The Dulles brothers were there as legal representatives for Kuhn Loeb Company, which had extended large short term credits to Germany. Their presence was to secure a guarantee of repayment from Hitler.
Moreover, Kurt von Schroder had extensive financial contacts in New York and London. He was a co-director of Thyssen foundry along with Johann Groeninger, Prescott Bush's New York bank partner. Schroeder was also the vice president and director of the Hamburg-Amerika Line, the same shipping line seized from Prescott Bush for trading with the enemy.

Throughout 1932, actions taken by the Bush-Harriman shipping line were directly responsible for bringing Hitler to power. The constitutional government tried to disarm the Nazi Brown Shirts to stop the mad election melees and murders. The U.S. embassy in Berlin reported:
" Hamburg-Amerika Line was purchasing and distributing propaganda attacks against the German government, for attempting this last-minute crackdown on Hitler's forces."
During 1932, Hitler's thugs murdered thousands of Germans. Arms for Hitler were shipped to Germany aboard Hamburg-Amerika Line. They were transferred to river barges before reaching Antwerp and then transported across Holland freely. Samuel Pryor, founder of Union Bank and a partner in the Hamburg-America Line was also executive committee chairman of Remington Arms. Hitler's Brown Shirts were armed primarily with Remington arms and Thompson submachine guns. A Senate investigation of Remington concluded that all of the political factions in Germany were armed with mostly American made guns.
Once Hitler and von Pappen had reached an agreement on their future course of actions. Pappen pressured Hindenburg to appoint Hitler as chancellor. The success of the meeting was recorded in Goebbels. On January 5, 1933 Goebbels wrote in his diary "If this coup succeeds, we are not far from power. . . . Our finances have suddenly improved."
Hindenburg appointed Hitler, as chancellor with the understanding Hitler would be a parliamentary rather than a presidential chancellor. Hitler immediately set about sabotaging the efforts to from a parliamentary majority. Here is one of the first examples of fascism and divisionism.
On February 1, 1933 the German parliament was dissolved and new elections were scheduled for early March. Using his henchmen, Hilter had the Reichstag building burnt. The fire was blamed on the communist, his main revivals. Using the fire as an excuse, Hitler banned the communist from the upcoming election. Additionally, Goring deputized his storm troopers to harass any political opposition from his position in the cabinet; even then the Nazis could not achieve a majority in parliament as they polled only 43.9 votes.14 By summer, all political parties except the Nazis had been dissolved. On the death of Hindenburg in 1934, Hitler assumed the office of president and further consolidated his gripe on power, but it would take a couple of additional years before Hitler was a true totalitarian. He purged the justice system of judges with adverse views, appointing rabid Nazis in their place, and the storm troopers were given police powers. Justice was now the Nazi party line.
One does not need to expound upon the extreme nationalism of the fascist. The history of their invasion in a quest for world dominion is well known. Mussolini turned his attention to Ethiopia and North Africa; Hitler first to Austria, then Czechoslovakia, followed by Western Europe and later to Norway and the east.
Hilter had left a blueprint for his extreme nationalism and the quest for lebensraum in Mien Kampf as shown by the quote below.
"If the National Socialist movement really wants to be consecrated by history with a great mission for our nation, it must be permeated by knowledge and filled with pain at our true situation in this world; boldly and conscious of its goal, it must take up the struggle against the aimlessness and incompetence which have hitherto guided our German nation in the line of foreign affairs. Then without consideration of traditions and prejudices it must find the courage to gather our people and their strength for an advance along the road that will lead this people from its present restricted living space to new land and soil; and hence also free it from danger of vanishing from the earth or of serving others as a slave nation.

The Nationalist Socialist movement must strive to eliminate the disproportion between our population and our area-viewing this later as a source of food as well as a basis for power politics---between our historical past and the helplessness of our present impotence."15

The third trait of fascism is that it consists of a top down revolution or movement. It is becoming more accepted today that the Nazis drew support from all classes. Indeed, this seems a reasonable assumption when looking at all of the evidence. The storm troopers for the most part drew their numbers from the lower and middle classes. They were typically were unemployed laborers, inept middle management, or failed businessmen. Likewise, given the vote tally of over thirty percent in the 1932 elections, the Nazis had to have drawn votes from all social classes. But this has no bearing on who controlled the direction of the party. Control of the party rested solely with Hitler and whom he allied with. He chose to ally with the upper class and big business as borne out by his policies after gaining power. There is little controversy over the considerable support Hitler drew from the aristocrats, the military, or the Junkers.

Telltale signs forewarning of the elite control was evident from the very formation of the party until the final days before gaining power. A brief look at those that financed the Nazis rise to power will reveal the real support behind Hitler. This is becoming an increasing issue of contention as American hard right tries to distance themselves from the similarities of their policies with fascism.

Hitler himself did not form the Nazi party initially. He joined an existing party and then molded it according to his wishes. In fact, his company commander had ordered him to attend a meeting of what was the German Workers Party. Here was Hitler's initial reaction to the party.

>"My impression was neither good or bad; a new organization like so many others. This was the time in which anyone who was not satisfied with developments and no longer had confidence in the existing parties felt called upon to found a new party. Everywhere these organizations sprang from the ground, only to vanish silently after a time. The founders for the most part had no idea what it means to make a party---let alone a movement---out of a club. And so these organizations nearly always stifle automatically in their absurd phillistinism."16

The order from his company commander provides the first evidence that the elite backed Hitler from the very beginning. At any point from this date the German military could have withdrawn its support of Hitler and disbanded the Nazi party

Hitler was a good orator by all reports, as well as an astute political observer. He knew how to motivate the masses in his name and how to sustain a movement. Someone once remarked recently that you needed only gain control of the 3Ms to gain power. The three "Ms" are the military, media, and money. Hitler had all three behind him. As shown by the passage from Mein Kampf, Hitler started with the blessing of the military. The military, as well as big business, played a behind the scenes role in the appointment of Hitler as chancellor. It's the last of the 3Ms where much confusion and debate arise, Hitler's source of funds or money.

Big business likewise had a large hand in bringing down Bruning in 1930. In a large part, it was the constant bickering by special interest groups that led to the falling of Bruning's cabinet. Big business was urging the following demands on the Bruning government:

>1. The government must take steps to lower the cost of production and widen the profit margin.
2. Lower taxes
3. Reduce the size of government.
4. Lower unemployment insurance benefit
5. The government must allow wages to progress to lower levels, by voiding labor contracts and binding arbitration.26

If these demands from the business community seem familiar to the reader, it's because in a large part they are the same policies that the Republican Party has been advocating for the last twenty years.

Throughout the 1920s and up until Hitler was appointed chancellor the Nazi party was plagued with a shortage of money. After release for prison for the failed Beer Hall Putsch, Hitler's only known source of income was from the sale of Mein Kampf and fees for newspaper articles he would write. The first edition of Mein Kampf was published July 18, 1925 in an edition of 10,000 copies selling for 12 marks. By the end of the year almost all copies had been sold. A new edition was printed but sales in the following year plummeted.

Nevertheless, almost immediately after being pardoned he bought a new super-charged Mercedes-Benz for 28,000 marks.17 Additionally, Hitler did not drive, so he had the additional expense of a chauffeur. Likewise, from 1925 until his appointment as chancellor in 1933, Hitler lived in increasing comforts, if not outright lavishness for the times. Certainly, the royalties from Mein Kampf and fees for his other writings were insufficient to cover even his living expenses, not to mention the party's expenses.

Also, the funding for an ever-increasing number of SA troopers (many of which were unemployed) had to be secured. Turner has suggested that the Nazis were self sufficient from dues, speaker's fees, and donations at rallies. However, this seems almost improbable looking at the numbers from 1930. In 1930 there were about 100,000 storm troopers that had to be fed, housed and otherwise supported. Additionally there were 15,000 in the SS. Nazi membership at the beginning of 1931 was only 389,000.18 Thus it seems very reasonable that outside sources of funding was needed to maintain the SA and SS, as well as the ever increasing lifestyle of Hitler. Membership fees in the Nazi party started at a mark per month, non-paying members were quickly dropped from the party.

From the very beginning of the Nazi party Hitler showed a knack for obtaining funding from the more privileged members of German society. For instance, everyone is well aware of the trial following the Beer Hall Putsch, but less well known was a secondary trial following the putsch. In the secondary trial, several businessmen that had donated money or other support for Hitler were put on trial. Some have attributed much of this early funding of the Nazis to the secret Thule Society.19 Another early source of funds in the early 20s came from the efforts of Scheubner-Richter, who was adept at gaining funds from Bavarian aristocrats, big businessmen, bankers, and leaders of heavy industry.20 Another source of early funds came indirectly from Fritz Thyssen. Henry Ford also exerted a considerable influence over Hitler in the early 1920s, as well as money. Some passages from Ford's International Jew are nearly identical to passages in Mein Kampf. Ford's book is reported to have had a large effect on many of the school children of the time that were suffering through hyperinflation and economic hard times while reading a book written by the world's foremost capitalist.

> The extent of Ford's financial donations to Hitler still remains a mystery. The U. S. ambassador to Germany, William Dodd, was quoted saying "certain American industrialists had a great deal to do with bringing fascist regimes into being in both Germany and Italy."21 The extent of corporate America's collaboration with the Nazis before the war and even during the war, in some cases, is not fully known. However, as time goes by and more information becomes available, the collaboration begins to appear significant, as shown in the following article.
"Bernd Greiner said 26 of the top 100 US companies in the 1930s collaborated to some degree with the Nazis before, and in some cases after, Hitler declared war on the United States in December 1941. Company headquarters in the US have denied they knew what was going on in Germany, but there is evidence to suggest they knew their German subsidiaries used slave labor, tolerated it and in some cases were actively involved, Greiner said.
Greiner confirmed a report in the newspaper Die Zeit, based on his findings of US corporate involvement in Nazi Germany. The findings went beyond allegations of US lawyers and historians last year that automakers General Motors and Ford collaborated with the Nazi regime."22
One of the more historically accurate, but shamefully apologetic to big business sources is the book, German Big Business and the Rise of Hitler by Turner.23 Turner does a good job in detailing the extensive participation of the leaders of business with the Nazis. However, he reaches the conclusion that big business did not support Hitler with a rather contrived definition of what big business is. He based his definition on the value of the float of stock on the market. His definition limited the number of companies that he would classify as big business to only 14 companies in the Ruhr industrial area and a smattering of companies located elsewhere. Essentially, his definition would be the equivalent of saying that only the Dow 30 companies in the U. S. could truly be called big business. This of course is nonsense. The majority of people would certainly consider Chrysler, Texas Instruments, Hewitt Packard, John Deere and Chase Manhattan Bank to be big business, but according to Turner's book they are not. It is from this group of second and third tier businesses (in keeping with Turner's definition) that provided the most help and support for Hitler. Furthermore, Turner neglects the effect of cartel agreements as well as subsidiaries in his analysis. Many of these second and third tier corporations were owned and controlled by the 14 corporations, he considered to be big business.

Secondly, Turner focuses much of his attention on the period of 1920-1928, when the Nazis were at best a minor noisy party. During this time, the Nazis were lucky to poll more than three percent of the vote. Yet Turner tries to use this as proof that big business did not support Hitler's rise to power, although he does admit that Fritz Thyssen and Kirdolf were supporters of the Nazis during this time. An equivalent situation would be today's Libertarian Party, a party that draws support from Koch, head of Koch refinery (a second tier company by Turner's reasoning). But no one is rushing to fund the Libertarians today when they cannot even poll five percent of the vote.

Finally, when the source of funds were unquestionably from big business Turner attempts to discredit them by claiming the source of the funds was a junior level executive that couldn't be responsible for overall company policy. Or he attempts to say they were given to an individual Nazi. In one shameful passage Turner attempts to discredit the funds given to Nazi fund-raiser Walther Funk by claiming they were not a donation to the party as they may have been spent by Funk for entertainment. Turner describes a particular drunken binge across town by Funk in which he passed out some rather large tips and then draws the conclusion that perhaps none of the funds given Funk ever reached the Nazis.24 This is not the work of a historian, as Turner claims to be. This is nothing more than conjecture by a propagandist. There is also one other speculative conclusion one could draw from this passage, and that is that the amount of money Funk was receiving was so enormous that it permitted such behavior.

Turner does a good job in showing that it was those second and third tier businesses that supported the Nazis. In Duren, a Rhenish manufacturing town, the Nazis received considerable support from local industrialists such as the millionaire dynasties (a term in use from the 1820s in describing these two families) of the Schoellers and the Schulls. Another area in which the Nazis received broad support from businesses was Solingen, an industrial town.25 Overall, Turner documents the participation of business leaders and their support for the Nazis, leaving no question in the reader's mind that business leaders exerted a considerable influence on the Nazis. Unfortunately, he ends his study just as the Nazis seize power.

Many businesses chose to align with and support the Nazis after they gained power. Krupp and I.G. Faben were both executors' of Goring's Four-Year Plan to make Germany militarily self-sufficient by 1940. One can view the details of Krupp's involvement and support for the Nazis after March 1933 in the documents from the War Crimes Tribunal at Nuremberg.31 The full set of available documents from Nuremberg is also available on the Internet.32 By 1939, I.G. Faben provided the Nazis with 90 percent of their foreign exchange, 95 percent of imports, and 85 percent of all military and commercial goods. In 1932, Hermann Schmitz Faben's joint chairman joined forces with Kurt von Schroder, director of a wealthy private bank. Schroder was a fanatical Nazi, often times dressed in his black SS uniform. Schroder is the man that is closely linked with Chase Bank, Standard Oil and William Teagle, and ITT. In 1932, Schroder and Wilhelm Keppler formed the group known as "The Fraternity." This group guaranteed a source of money to the Gestapo. Members agreed to contribute an average of one million marks a year to Himmler's personally marked "S" account and the transferable secret "R" account of the Gestapo.27

In April of 1933, Gustav Krupp sought out a private meeting with Hitler. Krupp agreed to become Hitler's chief fundraiser and chairman of the Adolf Hitler Fund. In return Hitler promised to appoint Krupp as the fuehrer of Germany industry. Over the years, Krupp contributed over six million marks of his own money to the Nazis, and his correspondence shows that he truly enjoyed his job as chairman.28 Likewise, it is common knowledge that after Hitler was appointed chancellor Krupp greeted people cheerfully with the Heil Hitler salutation.

Schirer writes that in 1931, when Hitler decided to cultivate relationships between influential industrial leaders, he kept their identity a secret.

"The party still had to play both sides of the tracks. The party had to allow Strasser, Goebbels and Feder to beguile the masses with socialist talk and denigrating the industrial magnates."

Some of the meetings were so secretive that they were held in forest glades."29

Further proof of the industrialist involvement and support of the Nazis comes from the testimony of Funk at Nuremberg. The entire list implicated by Funk is far too long to reproduce here, but besides Thyssen and Krupp it included Georg von Schnitzler-I.G. Farben, August Rosterg and August Diehn of the potash industry, Cuno of the Hamburg Amerika Line, Otto Wolf, Kurt von Schroder, and many other wealthy industrialists30

On May 2, 1933, the Nazis raided and occupied all trade union headquarters. The leaders were beaten and arrested; some were placed in the concentration camps. Union funds were confiscated and the unions were dissolved. Members of the communist party and the social democrats had already been arrested. On June 20, 1934, in what has become known as the Night of Long Knifes, Hitler purged the socialists within the Nazi party, chief among them Roehm.

With the broad financial support from the leaders of the business community as well as from the military leaders and aristocrats, the Nazis were truly a top down organization, while the Nazis used the lower class as foot soldiers to gain power. They did so in a deceiving manner, and once in power, immediately set about betraying the lower classes

We have already shown one example of divisionism by the Nazis in their rise to power. But what sets fascist divisionism apart from the ordinary divisionism of any other political ideology? Certainly any politician in a democracy appeals to some sort of divisionism, as he is fully aware that he can not possibly appeal to the entire electorate. The difference lies in the fact that divisionism is always destructive in fascism and serves only as a means to gain and maintain power. Even after gaining power, Hitler went to great pains in dividing power, playing one follower against another, creating rivalries in the party in the process. In short, Hitler kept the Nazi party divided as if it was a set of small fiefdoms. One of the biggest myths about the Nazis is that they were a single unit, when in fact they were a conglomeration of various fractured parts. Eatwell states the paradox within Hitler's power structure as: "because the party was so divided that he had power and in turn the party was divided from other key centers of power such as the army." 47 In other ideologies, the divisionism is not inherently destructive. Rather, it's based on differing approaches coming together to reach an equable solution to a problem. In his rise to power, Hitler had no intention of compromising with the other parties to form a parliamentary president. His moves were calculated to destroy any chance of that.

A couple of examples from the present can further delineate the difference between the two. Certainly many of the tax proposals coming from the Republican party today could be classed as divisionism as they favor the upper income earners over the lower income groups. While the measures are divisive they can hardly be labeled as destructive divisionism. They are more a reflection of difference in opinion.

However, an example of an act that could be termed a fascist divisionism was the Republican caused shut down of the government in November 1995 after Clinton vetoed the budget bill. Clinton had previously warned Congress that unless changes were made in the budget he would veto the bill. Members of the hard right Council for National Policy and many of their Republican members openly had declared they would shut down the government. In essence, the Republicans adopted the same policy that Hitler had in his bid to dismiss parliament; they refused to negotiate honorably.

Just as Hitler had taken a position to subvert democracy, so had the Republicans, led by Gingrich. The constitution defines the passing of the budget in detail. The spending bills originate in the House after passage by both the House and the Senate. It is then sent to the President, who may either veto it or sign it. If the bill is vetoed, it is up to Congress and the President to reach a compromise bill. Otherwise, Congress must pass a bill with a two-thirds majority. The failure of Congress to pass a bill to advert a government shutdown was a dereliction of their constitutional duty. Fortunately, the outrage coming from the general public forced the Republicans back to the negotiation table. The point to be made is the only difference between the two events---the Republicans feared the wrath of the people and capitulated, Hitler had no such fear and parliament was dismissed.

The Republican shut down of the government also serves to point out a flaw in our constitution, just as there was a flaw in the German constitution. In the case of the U. S. constitution there is no other mechanism other than shutting down the government if Congress fails to pass a budget. If the fascists in America can be successful in polarizing American politics to such an extent that the public, or at least a considerable portion of it, tolerates a government shut down, then the entire budget process becomes a fracas. And after observing the behavior of the Republicans in their ill fated attempt to impeach Clinton such a possibility does not appear so remote.
Another example of divisionism that is solely destructive that is not based on racism or class warfare was the impeachment of Bill Clinton. It served no purpose other than to smear the president, the articles of impeachment fell far short of what the founding fathers had defined in the phrase "high crimes and misdemeanors." That phrase refers back to the misuse of offices in England under the king. Additionally, the investigation of Ken Starr has been plagued by civil rights abuse and possible criminal action by Starr himself. It resembles a coup headed by the multi millionaire Scaife with the aid of the religious right, more than it resembled a justified impeachment.
But perhaps, the greatest illustration of the divisionism was seeing support for the impeachment evaporate like rain on hot pavement in the Senate following the State of the Union address and a thorough defense of the charges by Clinton's legal team. The House prosecutors with the conclusion of Ken Starr questioned Monica Lewinsky further in secret. This single action by the House Republicans invoked criticism from even members of their own party in the Senate. It was conducted against the agreed upon rules, and it was unconstitutional in that the power of investigation is delegated to the Senate. Likewise, it is against the statute of the Independent Council. It served no purpose other than to further divide and disgust the country. In short, it is nothing but an attempt at a power play.

Often times, this divisionism takes the form of racism or class warfare. It is often stated that Mussolini tried to eliminate class distinctions in fascist Italy. But the reality is that he only reinforced those distinctions. Certainly the Nazis practiced racism in an outrageous manner, ending in the Holocaust. On the other hand, fascist Italy was not racist in nature until after Mussolini adopted Hitler's Jewish solution. Fascism doesn't necessary have to be racist in nature, but racism is often used to divide the citizens, as their radical platform isn't appealing to the broad masses. In addition, racism is violent in nature and the resulting chaos from the violence serves to further divide the masses. Whether or not a fascist state is racist seems to depend more upon the culture of the society in which it arises. Before fascism, Italy had a long history of generally equable racial relationships, going all the way back to the old Roman Empire. For instance, even the slaves were eventually given full rights in Rome. However, the roots of anti-Semitism goes back much further in Germany as shown in the following quote.

"This is a good month to reflect on the toxicity of words meant to kill. Nov. 9 marks the 60th anniversary of Kristallnacht, the 1938 'Night of Shattered Glass' unleashed by the Nazis to terrorize Germany's Jews. The date was chosen specially by Josef Goebbels, Hitler's propagandist, to honor the birthday of Martin Luther, the 16th century monk who was a father of the protestant Reformation and the founder of what became the Lutheran church.

Hitler greatly admired Luther: "He saw the Jew as we are only beginning to see him today." Indeed. Luther saw the Jews as 'hopeless, wicked, venomous, and devilish... our pest, torment, and misfortune.' Initially, certain that his version of Christianity would appeal to Jews, he expected large numbers of them to covert. When that failed to happen, he turned violently against them. In 1543, Luther Published "On the Jews and Their Lies," a work that would become known throughout Germany, perhaps the most widely disseminated work of anti-Semitism by a German until the rise of the Nazis 400, years later.

"What then shall we Christians do with this damned, rejected race of Jews?" Luther asked.

"First, their synagogues should be set on fire, and whatever does not burn up should be covered or spread over with dirt, so that no one may ever be able to see a cinder or stone of it...

Secondly, their homes should likewise be broken down and destroyed...

Thirdly, they should be deprived of their prayer books and Talmuds, in which such idolatry, lies, cursing, and blasphemy are taught.

Fourthly, their rabbis must be forbidden under threat of death to teach any more...

Fifthly, passports and traveling privileges should be absolutely forbidden to the Jews...

Sixthly, I advise that...all cash and treasure of silver and gold be taken from them...

Burn down their synagogues, forbid all that I enumerated earlier, force them to work, and deal harshly with them... If this does not help we must drive them out like mad dogs, so we do not become partakers of their abominable blasphemy and all their other vices. I have done my duty. Now let everyone see to his."

This is hate speech.

< Sixty years ago next Monday on the night of Luther's birthday, Nazi gangs rampaged across Germany. In every Jewish neighborhood, windows were smashed and buildings were torched. All told, 101 synagogues were destroyed, and nearly 7,500 Jewish-owned businesses were demolished. On that night, 91 Jews were murdered; 26,000 were rounded up and sent to concentration camps. It was the greatest pogrom in history. And it was nothing compared with what was to come."33

The question then remains whether the fascism in America can be considered racist or not. The past history of racism in the United States would tend to support such. As a nation, we was one of the last industrial nations to allow slavery, and it took the Civil War to end slavery. It has been less than fifty years since "separate but equal" was the rule of the land. It's only been sixty years since Japanese citizens and immigrants were interred in camps following the bombing of Pearl Harbor. The Rosewood incident happened less than a hundred years ago, and lynching of blacks was common well into the 20th century. This country has had a long, incredulous history of bigotry and even genocide. There is no question of the genocide of Native Americans in the efforts of the U. S. Army in passing out blankets infected with small pox, or the slaughter of the Plains Indian's primary source of food, the buffalo. Then there was the Trail of Tears, as well. The Irish immigrants, following the potato famine, were greeted by the Know Nothings, a party that based its support on the hate of Catholics.

All of the hard right groups are racist, although more than one tries to play their racism down or to hide it, such as the John Birch Society and some of the various militia groups. Others are openly racists, such as the Klan, the Nazis and the skinheads. The great unifier of the far right, the Identity religion, links many of the hard right groups. The Identity religion is based on anti-Semitic belief that the true followers of Jesus immigrated to Britain and northern Europe, that today's Jews are the descendents of Satan. It's the mainstay religion among the militias, the Posse Comitatus, and even among some of the Klan groups.

Besides the normal hate groups based on racism or anti-Semitism. the religious right has emerged in the 1990s as a venomous hate group basing their hate on gays and abortion. Abortion clinics increasingly are becoming targets of bombings, arson, and vandalism. Late in 1998, Matthew Shepard was murdered in Wyoming after being tie to a fence and then pistol whipped, for being gay. Below are some quotes about gays from one of the leaders of the religious right, Pat Robertson.

"This conduct [homosexuality] is anti-social, and it is a pathology. It is a sickness, and it needs to be treated. It doesn't need to be taught in the classroom as a preferred way of life..." - 700 Club, 3-7-90

"...the acceptance of homosexuality is the last step in the decline of Gentile civilization." --Pat Robertson, of the Christian Broadcasting Network, warned that hurricanes could hit Orlando, Fla., because of gay events there. Time magazine, Oct 26, 1998

"If the world accepts homosexuality as its norm and if it moves the entire world in that regard, the whole world is then going to be sitting like Sodom and Gomorrah before a Holy God. And when the wrath of God comes on this earth, we will all be guilty and we will all suffer for it." - 700 Club, 9-6-9534

Compare that last quote of Robertson's to the following quote of Hitler on syphilis.

"...they speak of this whole field as if it were a great sin, and above all express their profound indignation against every sinner caught in the act, then close their eyes in pious horror to this godless plague and pray God to let sulfur and brimstone preferably after their own death rain down on this Sodom and Gomorrah, thus once making an instructive example of this shameless humanity."39

Such evidence, as Robertson's words, abounds that they would persecute gays, it abounds in the numerous ballot measures in various states that would deny gays their civil rights. Such a measure passed in Colorado, only to be overturned by the Supreme Court. Another measure, led by Lon Mabon in Oregon failed state wide, but was reintroduced on local ballots in the following election. Mabon has also led ballot measures to limit the concept of a family and limiting abortions to only the first trimester. The first was another attempt to limit the rights of gays.
In June 1998, near Jasper, Texas a black man named James Byrd was dragged behind a pickup. Body parts were found over a two mile length of the roadway.35 It is too early for trends in hate crimes to emerge, as the FBI only began tracking hate crimes in 1991. The one trend that does seem to be emerging is the hate crimes are becoming increasingly violent as evident from the murders of Shepard and Byrd. The real danger of these two murders is they serve to desensitize us, leading to more numerous and increasing levels of violence, just as the Nazis used increasing levels of violence against the Jews.
Racism is reemerging in various forms in the 1990s in political issues and in the Republican Party. "English only" laws are being promoted with increasing frequency by various Republican candidates, including Robert Dole, and have even appeared on some ballot measures such as California Prop 187. The obvious targets are immigrants from Mexico. In effect, its nothing more than the reemergence of nativism. Other forms of nativism have appeared, such as denying immigrants access to welfare and the school system for children of immigrants. Nativism is also behind various immigration bills and the increasing efforts directed at illegals.
Perhaps the most dangerous form of racism to emerge has been the Republican efforts to 'monitor' the polls. And videotape those leaving. Cases have arisen in the 1998 election in North Carolina, Georgia, Michigan, Maryland, Kentucky, Texas and Maine. The efforts are directed primarily at districts in which have a high percentage of minorities. Such efforts serve no useful purpose and do constitute a violation of the Voting Rights Act.36 More disturbing is the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, William Rehnquist, served as the director of Republican 'ballot security' in the poor areas of Phoenix, Arizona between 1958-1962.37 He likewise wrote a pro separate but equal memo as a law clerk for Justice Robert Jackson. All of which was brought out in his confirmation hearings.
An even more subtle effort on the part of Republicans in denying votes to the minorities and the poor is centered on the debate to allow a statistical correction to the 2000 census. Such effort on the part of the Republicans goes far beyond the election of 2000. The census will be used to reapportionment of the congressional districts for the decade. Thus, by denying the correction, they in effect are perpetuating their power to 2010 by undercounting groups that historically vote for Democrats n Dec 1998, Republican House member Bob Barr and Senator Trent Lott were exposed as keynote speakers before the Council of Conservative Citizens, a racist organization. Lott was later determined to have been an honorary member and had written several articles for their paper dating back to the early 1990s. In January, Republican National Chairman, Jim Nicholson asked members to dissociate themselves from this group and directly appealed to national committee member Buddy Witherspoon from South Carolina to resign. The request was refused.38

Once before, the Republicans were asked to denounce the radical John Birch Society at their National Convention in the early 1960s. Moderate members such as the former President Jerry Ford, did so. However the measure failed.

>Another Republican that deserves mention here is Pat Buchanan and his anti-Semitic views. Buchanan has opposed virtually all civil rights bills and favorable court decisions; he has supported apartheid in South Africa; he has spewed forth views of Holocaust denial; he has called fascists such as Franco and Pinochet soldier-patriots. And Buchanan was a key figure in urging Reagan to visit the SS cemetery in Bitburg.40

Thus as we prepare to enter a new century, the Republican Party has adopted racism as a divisionist tool to divide the electorate in an attempt to maintain power and enact their extremist agenda. Not all members of the Republican Party are racist, but many of the members from the hard right that controls the party are racists. There are honorable members of the party, but they are being forced into lesser and lesser roles. The extremists have gained control. It is the burden of those honorable members to take back control of their party and denounce the extremist before it becomes too late.

Perhaps the best assessment of the use of destructive divisionism by fascist in the United States comes from a 1945 War department publication:

"Three Ways to Spot U.S. Fascists.

Fascists in America may differ slightly from fascists in other countries, but there are a number of attitudes and practices that they have in common. Following are three. Every person who has one of them is not necessarily a fascist. But he is in a mental state that lends itself to the acceptance of fascist aims.

1.Pitting religion, racial, and economic groups against one another in order to break down the national unity is a device of the divide and conquer technique used by Hitler to gain power in Germany and in other countries. With slight variations, to suit local conditions, fascists everywhere have used this Hitler method. In many countries, anti-Semitism is a dominant devise of fascism. In the United States native fascists have often been anti-Catholic, anti-Jew, anti-Negro, anti-Labor and anti-foreign born. In South America native fascists use the same scapegoats except that they substitute anti-Protestantism for anti-Catholicism.

Interwoven with the master race theory of fascism is a well planned hate campaign against minority races, religions, and other groups. To suit their particular needs and aims, fascists will use any one or a combination of such groups as a convenient scapegoat.

2. Fascism cannot tolerate such religious and ethical concepts as the brotherhood of man. Fascists deny the need for international cooperation. These ideas contradict the fascist theory of the master race. The color, race, creed or nationality-have rights. International cooperation, as expressed in the Dumbarton Oaks proposals, run counter to the fascist program of war and world domination. Right now our native fascists are spreading anti-British, anti-Soviet, anti-French and anti-United nations propaganda.
3. It is accurate to call a member of a communist party a communist. For short, he is often called a Red. Indiscriminate pinning of the label Red on people and proposals which one opposes is a common political device. It is a favorite trick of native as well as foreign fascists.
Many fascists make the spurious claim that the world has but two choices---either fascism or communism and they label as communist everyone who refuses to support them. By attacking our free enterprise, capitalist democracy and by deny the effectiveness of our way of life they hope to trap many people."74

The extreme anti-communism and anti-socialism stance of the fascist is beyond dispute among honest historians. Both communists and socialists were the first to enter the concentration camps in Nazi Germany. Both Mussolini and Franco fought against communist influence. From the brief survey of the fascist philosophers and extreme anti-liberal stance has been a factor in fascism from the beginning. The Nazi used socialism as a ruse to gain power, but once in power they purged the socialists within their party. The following quotes taken from Mein Kampf will illuminate the anti-communism, anti-parliamentary democracy, and the social darwinism of Hitler.
"Just as in 1918 we paid with our blood for the fact that in 1914 and 1915 we did not proceed to trample the head of Marxist serpent once and for all, we would have to pay most catastrophically if in the spring of 1923 we did not avail ourselves of the opportunity to halt the activity of the Marist traitors and murders of the nation for good"41 >
"As regards the possibility of putting these ideas into practice, I beg you not to forget that the parliamentary principle of democratic majority rule has by no means always dominated mankind, but to the contrary is to be found only in brief periods of history, which are always epochs of decay of peoples and states."42
"The best state constitution and state form is that which, with the most unquestioned certainty, raises the best minds in the national community to leading position and leading influence.
But as in economic life, the able men cannot be appointed from above, but must struggle through for themselves,..."43
The second quote certainly is anti-liberal as it shows Hitler's contempt for the democratic process. The last quote reveals Hitler as a social Darwinist of which Turner makes the point in several places in his book.44 Social Darwinism runs counter to the aims of socialism. In fact it is the antithesis. It allows the elite to gain further power, it willingly discards the poor and the weak as expendables. With the anti-communism stance and social Darwinism character of Hitler, it is not surprising that the fascist in America would come from the extreme right. The United States was right in opposing communism. But to what links? As with anything else moderation is an admirable quality, excesses of any nature are damaging. Truman or Eisenhower were not fascists for their anti-communism actions. However, Tail Gunner Joe was either a fascist or a willing dupe of fascists. The type of anti-communism of McCarthy served no other purpose than to further his political career. He openly violated the right to free speech and assembly of his victims. His aim was to destroy them with out any regard to the evidence.

The social Darwinism as initiated by Reagan and his attacks on the poor, and the dismantling of the welfare program led by Newt Gingrich will also be labeled as examples of creeping fascism. Throwing people into the streets arbitrarily to fend for themselves is destructive; it is social Darwinism at its worst. Forcing them to except wages below the minimum wage law is denying them their equal rights. But it was precisely the economic woes of Germany that allowed the Nazis to rise to power. Currently America is enjoying good economic times, but when the economy takes a turn to the south the full impact of the lack of a social safety net is going to be felt hard.

The next trait of fascism, extreme exploitation, is a direct result of one of the primary traits of fascism, extreme nationalism. The form of nationalism promoted by fascism not only concerns the standing in the world but also applies to the sacrifices that are expected of citizens. In short, the fascist state reigns supreme while the individuals are subordinate to the state. The subordination of individuals to the state is the antithesis of liberalism. Once again some quotes from Mein Kampf will suffice.

"Since for us the state as such is the only form, but the essential is its content, the nation, the people, it is clear that everything else must be subordinated to its sovereign interests."45

"a peace, supported not by the palm branches of tearful, pacifist female mourners, but based on the victorious sword of a master people, putting the world into the service of a higher culture."46

Certainly from those two quotes there can be no question of the subordination of individuals as practiced under the Nazis or to any limits short of world domination by the Nazis. It is often stated that Hitler left a road map to his future goals in Mein Kampf. There is no greater evidence of that than in the last quote. How then did he rise to power? The problem was nobody was listening. Nobody challenged his aggressive views toward war, or at best they believed that they could control or contain him. Only later did they find out the errors of that false assumption.

This writer can find only two instances of this extreme exploitation in America. Thanks to the efforts of CBS 60 Minutes and Evening News, the story broke about the Tomb of the Unknown and how the Reagan White House pressured the military to find an unknown to bury on Memorial Day 1984. Turns out that in their haste to respond to the pressure coming from the White House, they deliberately buried a fallen soldier that wasn't so unknown. The unknown was Michael Bassie. This man had given everything to his country except for his name. And the lowlife filth occupying the White House had that stripped from him so he could have a photo op on Memorial Day in an election year. This writer can think of no other action that is more despicable; it's unforgivable.

Of course Reagan made sure he was the star of this photo op and used it to promote and build support for his extremist military agenda.
The second instance comes at the hands of Newt Gingrich and the Republicans of the 104th and 105th Congress. They have stripped the rights of welfare recipients and required that they participate in workfare. The problem comes in that these poor souls are not even entitled to be paid the minimum wage or the right to unionize in some cases. In other words, the Republican's answer to the poor is to force the to work in perpetual slavery with no chance of ever breaking out of poverty.
But this event is much more dangerous and goes much further than it appears. The danger here lies in the suspension of the constitutional equality under the eyes of the law. The Republicans have in effect created a sub-class in which one of the very fundamental tenets of our constitution, equality under the eyes of the law was ignored and thrown out the window. Nor is this the only example of unequal treatment of the poor at the hands of the Republicans. They also have advocated cut backs in the budget for the public defender's office.
The Republicans have been very successful in their propaganda in demonizing the poor. There seems to be an almost gutter level hatred of the poor and any aid to assist them. Instead of reaching out a compassionate helping hand towards the poor, the Republicans have adopted a mean spirited social Darwinist view.
This brings us to the trait of opportunistic ideology of fascism. It is perhaps one of the more confusing aspects of fascism. Mussolini appears to have been indeed a socialist before founding the fascist party. Mussolini likewise went from a pacifist to a rabid warmonger. Clearly such dramatic changes in ideology could only be based in an opportunistic grab for power. Mussolini started supporting a syndicalism economy, but by 1923, with clear objections from business leaders, he concluded the Palazzo Chigi Pact. This pact's main intent was to simplify business relations by making the fascist the sole representative of labor. In 1925, the Plazzo Vidoni agreement was signed. This agreement made Rossoni's union the sole representative of labor. It likewise prohibited the challenging of factory management. By the close of the year, the grateful employer's federation publicly announced adherence to the fascist regime.48 Such transformations illistrate the opportunistic ideology present in fascism or is it a lack of ideology, as well as further dispeling the myth that fascism is another form of socialism.

Part of the problem with the ever-changing ideology of fascism arises from the divisionism. Strasser was a socialist and it seems that Goebbels was a Marxist. Both were allowed almost free reign in promoting their own economic views as long as it gathered more support of serve Hitler's purpose. But once their views failed to serve Hitler, they were then brow beaten severely. An example of such reversal in party ideology of the Nazis occurred on February 14,1926. Prior to this date, both Strasser and Goebbels had approved of a plebiscite campaign to deprive former royalty of their possessions, a measure, that was popular with the common citizens. On the given date, Hitler summoned both men to a meeting in Bamberg. Before those gathered, Hitler forced both to capitulate and abandon the program.49 Similar events have already been given, in which various Nazis were initially allowed to promote socialism in efforts to appease the lower classes in an effort to gain their support.
Examples abound throughout the history of the Nazis where they adopted their ideology to suit the audience. In October 1932, Strasser announced a new program that was a stark reversal of the program the Nazis had advocated in July. Higher taxes on the rich had been replaced with a general reduction of taxes, instead of price controls it centered on freeing prices. Instead of protectionism trade policy, export and global trade was now promoted. Likewise, much of the inflammatory rhetoric had been dropped.50
Hitler seems to have sensed the explosive nature of economics and tried to avoid the subject both publicly and within the party. From all indications, he was dissatisfied with the party planks on economic matters. The only official stance on economic matters was the 1920 twenty-five point program. However, he only referred to this policy document disparagingly in Mein Kampf and distanced himself from the document.51 Likewise Hitler would never take an aggressive stance on minor issues, he played to his audience to win their support.
Perhaps the most dramatic evidence of the opportunistic character of the Nazis is illustrated by the actions of thirty-nine businessmen in November 1932. The group contained such notables as Krupp, Thyssen, Bosch, Siemens, and others. In a signed letter to Hindenburg they urged him to appoint Hitler as chancellor. In essence they were placing a bet that the socialism ideology was a fraud and that once in power he would be a tool of capitalist.52
The only other reversal in policy that could rival the bet that the leaders of big business made was Hitler's writings. In the first part of Mein Kampf he argued that France was the sworn and greater enemy of Germany. However, the second part to Mein Kampf he reversed course and argued that Russia was the enemy as opposed to the first book in which he proposed an alliance with Russia.53 This was a complete change in his foreign policy. One can only speculate as to the reasons behind such a switch.
Many writers have tried to label the Nazis as socialists in a folly to distance themselves from fascist theory. They are quick to point to the syndicalism policy as proof of socialist regulation of business. They are in error, of course. Syndicalism is neither left nor right in itself. It can be either, depending upon the political structure. Syndicalism with labor groups or consumers dominating the issues would indeed be socialistic in nature. On the other hand, syndicalism with only industry or business groups dominating is certainly from the right wing of the political spectrum. The issuing of controls or goals over the production of war material by the government in a syndicalism system is neither left nor right, it's simply self-preservation. The goals and controls, including the 4-Year Plan issued by Goring, were nothing more than gearing the economy up for war time production. In essence, they were merely self-preservation measures. >

Secondly, they will point toward many of the public works projects that were implemented under the Nazis as examples of socialism. An example of this is the construction of the autobahn, a project that had been planned by previous governments, as were many of the public work projects. They likewise forget that the Nazis took over at the bottom of an economic depression, public work projects were enacted not only in Germany, but in the U. S. as well as a means to end the depression. Many of those projects in the U. S. were the construction of useful infrastructure, such as the building of the high school in New Ulm, Minnesota. Others had a definite commercialism bent to them, such as the construction of Timberline Lodge on Mount Hood in Oregon. Labeling the construction of a facility for a commercial business as socialism is simply fools folly. The same applies to many of the public works projects that were implemented under the Nazis. Labeling such programs as socialism would be the same as labeling the construction of the interstate highway system as socialism. If the Eisenhower administration had one shinning moment, it was his support for the construction of the freeway system. For those that are silly enough to label such work as socialism, let them be reminded that no other single event, other than the construction of the cross continental railroad aided the development of business. Besides the obvious advantage to shippers, the interstate highway system has spawned many new businesses. Think of the number of motels/hotels as well as the tourist traps, service stations, and others that have grown up along the freeway system. The same applies to Germany and the autobahn.

Finally, the same writers that label fascism as socialism would like their readers to believe that these government regulations and bureaucratic offices held ultimate power. Failure to comply would result in the owners being shot. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Nazis for a large part lived in fear of the leaders of big business. They were aware that they had no comprehensive economic plan and would defer to the judgement of the business leaders.

This point can be driven home with one simple example. Goering was one of the Nazis that had little economic knowledge, but harbored some of the more radical economic ideas and was fond of using regulatory offices. Goering tried first to persuade the steel industry, both the smelters and miners, to use low-grade German ore as opposed to the high-grade Swedish ore. Importation of ore from Sweden would use up precious foreign currency, as well as being a less reliable source in the event of war. The invasions of Denmark and Norway were conducted solely to protect the Nazis shipping routes for the Swedish ore. Most of the industrialists politely refused Goering's request; even under threats of arrest for sabotage, they still declined.54 None were arrested for refusal. Instead Goering formed the Herman Goering Works to take on the task. By the time of the outbreak of the war it had evolved to be one of the largest companies in Germany.

Farben is another example of the Nazis bowing to the expertise of leading corporations. With the advent of the first 4-Year Plan, they realized they needed the cooperation of business leadership in order to achieve self-sufficiency in a series of raw materials and finished products. Most of which were items would be crucial to wartime production. By the end of the war Farben, had a series of factories around concentration camps, were major users of slave labor, along with Krupp and many other corporations.

But the most damning evidence of the Nazi's unbridled corporatism was evident shortly after passage of the Enabling Act, when Hjalmar Schacht was appointed president of the Reichsbank. Schacht was a brilliant financier who helped negotiate the Dawes Plan and was largely responsible for stabilizing the currency in 1923; he also detested democracy and parliamentarianism. His first official act was the creation of Metall-Forschungsgesellschaft A.G. (Mefo), a dummy corporation of four armament firms. The state assumed the liability for their debts. The Mefo bills were not unlike promissory notes, they were issued to government contractors and could be extended to five years.55 Such favoritism of business is certainly not socialism. Today in America such corporate aid is labeled as corporate welfare. Note the similarity here not only to the present corporate welfare that's being doled out, but also to Eisenhower's warning of the military-industrial complex. The American military-industrial complex didn't need to invent a new plan, they were simply free to follow the example the Nazis used. In fact fascism is inseparatable from corporatism. You simply cannot have a fascist government without corporations and a capitalistic economy.

Schacht was later appointed to minister of economics in 1934, a post he retained until he resigned in 1937 over policy disputes. He was not an anti-Semitic and was conscious of the negative aspects of the takeover of Jewish business on both the economy and world opinion. By 1936, he was advocating slowing down the rearmament program, fearing the return of inflation.56 The return of inflation dispenses with the myths that the Nazis maintained strict control of corporations and the prices of goods in short order. In effect, such controls were non-existent. It should also be pointed out here that the economy at this time had taken on considerable shades of a consumer economy.

Italy used their form of syndicalism to eliminate labor unions; the Nazis followed a similar path. The workers benefited little from this unbridled corporatism. Unemployment went from an official figure of six million unemployed in 1933, to 2.7 million in 1937, and by the time of the outbreak of war there was a serious shortage of workers. But growth in wages was far less spectacular, real wages rose only sparingly. The index of wages rose from 92.5 in 1933 to 103 in 1937, an increase of a meager eleven-percent.57 Much of the increase in wages was achieved only from working longer hours. The only real increases in the plight of the workers came with more unpaid leave. Many of the other benefits produced no real benefits to the worker, such as the factory beautification program.

From looking at the philosophers of fascism, it was revealed that fascism was a reactionary movement. What then was the fascist reacting to that led to the rise of Mussolini and Hitler? Many people responding to the question would simply answer the Treaty of Versailles. But such an answer is only partially correct. It doesn't account for the widespread rise of fascism in many European countries following WWI. In fact, during the period between the two world wars, every government from the Rhine to the Pacific underwent drastic changes. In many of those fascism had ample support but in the end was rejected. Some of the problem can be laid to the beginning dissolution of the British Empire and the arbitrary way in which maps were redrawn following WWI without regard to ethnic or natural barriers. An example would be the cobbled mess of ethnic groups that formed the former republic of Yugoslavia, an area that remains a hot spot today.

Britain and the United States were about the only two governments that did not undergo a major change during the period between the wars. However, neither was immune to the rise of fascism. The U. S. saw a rise of a great many fascist groups and groups closely aligned with the fascist in the period between the wars. The German Bund, the Silver Shirts and the mother's movement were all aligned closely with fascism. It was also this period that seen the greatest membership in the Ku Klux Klan.

The United States avoided full-blown fascism by essentially adopting fascist methods on a milder scale. This was a shameful period in the history of America. The infamous Palmer raids rounded up those with communist connections. The I.W.W was harassed constantly by Hoover and the FBI. In short, only those with non-approved political beliefs would be prosecuted. This suppression of liberty had actually begun around 1900. At the turn of the century, both conservative and liberal elements combined to pass a blizzard of new laws. This effort aimed at curbing lawless quickly became dominated by conservative elements and evolved in a tool for the right wing for the remainder of the century.

As head of the FBI, Hoover quickly targeted the leaders of the left for prosecution, ignoring the criminal actions of the hard right groups. This has left the United States without any noticeable left wing compared to the rest of the industrial world.

Perhaps one of the first and most notable events was the trial of Sacco and Vanzetti, two immigrants charged with murder in Massachusetts. They were found guilty more on their political beliefs than on evidence. They were anarchists, atheists, and reportedly draft dodgers, beliefs that threatened the industrialists of the time.64 Both were executed after considerable protest. Their trial set a dangerous standard that people could be prosecuted for their political beliefs. The inclusion of this trial here is to serve as a reminder of a new problem that is emerging to confront the hard right, jury nullification. Today there is considerable debate from both sides of the political spectrum on jury nullification arising in death penalty and drug cases. It warrants close observation. If the public becomes too polarized, it could spell the end to the trial by jury system, which has served admirably for over 200 years.

Various members of the right wing are now using this as an issue in another attempt to polarize the electorate for their own selfish purposes. These members of the right wing are promoting a system of justice backed by mob or vigilante justice. Essentially, it's a system backed by violence that is not unlike the tactics used by the Posse Comitatus, the Freemen, or various militias to corrupt the justice system.

The first example of political repression came in Minnesota. The then Republican Governor Burnquist used the newly created Minnesota Commission of Public Safety to suspend New Ulm's Mayor Fritsche and City Attorney Pfaender for their pacifist views after war had been declared on Germany in 1917. The following quote details some of the shameful actions taken by the commission and its connection to the hard right.

In April 1917, soon after America declared war on Germany, the Minnesota Legislature, following ferocious debate, created the Minnesota Commission of Public Safety. This remarkable body, chaired and appointed by the governor, was given "all necessary power" to maintain order and enhance Minnesota's contribution to the war effort. Technically limited by the state and federal constitutions, the commission essentially wielded all the authority of state government during the 18 months of its active existence. >

The commission came to be dominated by representatives of the Twin Cities business community. It used its sweeping authority with gusto, not only to root out ``disloyalty'' but to combat labor unionism and agrarian activism as well.

The commission dispatched detectives throughout Minnesota to investigate people and organizations suspected of disloyalty. It regulated food prices and the liquor trade, imposing prohibition in some parts of the state. It banned union organizing and intervened on the side of management in a bitter Twin Cities streetcar strike. It created a ``Home Guard'' of some 8,000 troops to back up its decrees. The commission served as a virtual campaign committee for Republican Gov. Joseph Burnquist in his 1918 re-election bid. It turned a blind eye toward frequent mob harassment of his opponents. It interrogated and intimidated Minnesotans who declined to purchase Liberty Bonds to finance the war effort.63

Nor was such action confined to just Minnesota, many states set up similar commissions. State sponsored violence against leaders from the left was common place. One group that suffered immeasurably was the I.W.W, the Wobblies. On Nov 5, 1916, Washington State suffered its bloodiest labor battle of all time. The resulting carnage between a local sheriff and the Wobblies left seven dead and over fifty wounded in the city of Everett.65

All three of these events illustrate that the United States repressed those with radical ideas in the time period of WWI and immediately thereafter. Pacifist, labor leaders, and leftist political leaders were all prosecuted with equal zeal. Remember, this was the time period of the Rosewood incident and other atrocities. The prosecution was lead by the hard right and business leaders.

But the real answer to the question is that fascism following WWI was a reaction to the Bolshevik revolution and the rise of liberalism ideals. Up until the Russian revolution, the only economic system was capitalism. Communism was a new revolutionary system. It threatened the power elite directly and gave way to a rise not only in communism but socialism and liberalism as well. It was no accident that fascism arose first in Italy, where in the period of 1919-1922, socialists ruled in many localities. Here fascism arose in the countryside were old practices such as sharecropping were giving way to new methods. In 1920, the largest strike in Italian agriculture ever was settled when the landowners capitulated. Elsewhere, unions were wringing out concessions from the owners through strikes and boycotts.58

The real appeal of European fascism was the protection it afforded against working class movements, socialism, and communism.59 Hobsbawm states it even more forcefully in claiming that without the October revolution and Leninism there would have been no need for fascism. For up until that time, the demagogic right, although politically active and noisy in many countries, had been kept in check.60 The entire Nazi movement was a reactionary movement. The reaction to the Treaty of Versailles is well known and needs no further comment, as is the opposition of fascism to liberalism, socialism and communism. Rather, the following quote will show how complete the reaction was to the events of the time.

"Today Christians... stand at the head of Germany... I pledge that I never will tie myself to parties who want to destroy Christianity...We want to fill our culture again with the Christian spirit... We want to burn out all the recent immoral developments in literature, in the theater, and in the press- in short, we want to burn out the poison of immorality which has entered into our whole life and culture as a result of liberal excess during the past...few years."61 <

The quote above was taken from a speech delivered by Hitler. It provides the illustration that the Nazi movement was completely a reactionary movement, reacting not only to global power politics and the rise of the left, but also to the changes in arts and culture of the time. It also provides the link to demonstrate that today's hard right movement in the U. S. is equally reactionary, in particular, the element of the so-called religious right. Contrast it with the quote by Pat Robertson below.

"The Constitution of the United States, for instance, is a marvelous document for self-governmentby Christian people. But the minute you turn the document into the hands of non-Christian and atheistic people they can use it to destroy the very foundation of our society."-Pat Robertson (The 700 Club, Dec. 30, 1981)62

Apparently, Robertson is under the impression that the constitution applies to only those he chooses and is null and void for the rest of us. Hitler held a similar contempt for democracy. However, the point that the Nazis were reactionary has been established beyond any doubt. The reaction was not just confined to the global political scene or economic conditions, but extended into the very roots of the culture. Starting around 1980, fascism reared its ugly head globally. Unlike the rise of fascism in the 1920s, this time the Reagan administration embraced it. The administration openly promoted class warfare, allowed the LaRocuhians access to security and intelligence agencies, filled the EPA with Coor's lackeys, and openly supported none but the elite. In essence, the Reagan administration was the American equivalent of the passage of the Enabling Act.

There is no need to expand on the violent behavior of the Nazis or fascists, as there is no dispute of their long history of violence. Instead, the violence of various groups in the United States will be explored. Many readers will immediately think of the violence that arose in the 60s during the war protests. In fact, that is the great illusion of the media. The truth is that little violence was directly attributed to war protestors. In fact much of the violence that did come out of the war protests was the work of the FBI.

The real story of violence in the 60s was the violence inflicted upon the civil rights workers by the Klan. The early part of the 60s was marred by violence, inspired by the Klan and racial hatred of right wing groups. Eisenhower had to use National Guards to integrate the Little Rock school system. Kennedy had to use federal marshals to integrate Old Miss. When the Supreme Court order that busing was to be used as a tool for integration, the violence spread nationally. The Klan burnt school busses in Michigan to prevent integration.

Since 1980, right wing groups such as the Order, which murdered the Denver talk show host, Berg, likewise have dominated the violence. The leader of the Order was killed in a shoot out with law enforcement. Another right wing group, the Posse Comitatus became a household word only after the Kahl shoot out with law enforcement in North Dakota. And of course there was the bombing of the Oklahoma federal building by the right winger McVeigh. Perhaps the greatest widespread use of violence since the Klan has been the bombing and violence directed against abortion clinics by members of the religious right.

Violence has been the hallmark of the hard right in America dating back at least as far as the Know Nothing Party in the 1800s and their hatred of Catholics. It was business leaders that hired Pinkertons to murder union organizers in earlier times. Yet there is relatively little in the way to support that left wing groups were equally violent. Groups like the Weathermen were violent, but the group was never more than a small fringe group. Its extremely small size limited the extent of its violence. One of the reasons for the lack of widespread violence from leftist groups has already been mentioned, the suppression of left wing groups by the FBI.

The last two traits of fascism will be explored together, as they are related by an underlying use of symbols and the inseparable nature of cults and religions. There is no doubt that both Hitler and Mussolini were in effect leaders of a cult. Their extremist views would rule out a major following otherwise. In fact, both promoted imagines consistent with cults. Both chose to use propaganda to promote larger than life imagines of themselves. Both Hitler and Mussolini were Catholics; neither appeared to be particularly active members of the church. Hitler referred to Christianity throughout Mein Kampf, as already shown by quotes of which a few more will be included here.
"The sword will become our plow, and from the tears of war the daily bread of future generations will grow."
"The more the linguistic Babel corroded and disorganized parliament, the closer drew the inevitable hour of the disintegration of this Babylonian Empire and with it the hour of freedom for my German-Austria people."
< " the Lord's grace smiled on his ungrateful children." > Officially, the Nazis were a Christian group, if one can assign a religion to the group by the public policies they enacted. In this case, the assignment is based on the following prayer that the Nazis required to be recited in all public schools.
"Almighty God, dear heavenly Father. In Thy name let us now, in pious spirit, begin our instruction. Enlighten us, teach us all truth, strengthen us in all that is good, lead us not into temptation, deliver us from all evil in order that, as good human beings, we may faithfully perform our duties and thereby, in time and eternity, be made truly happy. Amen."67
It is also true that the Nazis dabbled in mysticism as well. Certainly some of the philosophers were pantheistic. But what really underlies both the religious and mysticism aspects of the Nazis is the symbolism buried underneath. In fact, one follower of fascism believed that the masses were unable to understand anything other than mere slogans. From Mein Kampf the following quote concerns the symbolism hidden behind the Nazi flag.
" Not only that the unique colors, which all of us so passionately love and which once won so much honor for the German people, attest our veneration for the past; they were also the best embodiment of the movement's will. As National Socialists, we see our program in our flag. In red we see the social idea of the movement, in white the nationalistic idea, in the swastika the mission of the struggle for victory of the Aryan man, and by the same token, the victory of the idea of creative work, which as such always has been and always will be anti-Semitic."66
At first in the quote above, Hitler is referring to the old flag of Germany. The choice of red was based on stealing from the communists and was chosen deliberately to enflame the Marxists. Throughout Mein Kampf, Hitler refers to the value of propaganda and made extensive use of symbols to convene a subtle message of hatred.

The similarities to the right wing in America is seen. The Republicans have introduced a flag desecration amendment to protect their symbolism. Even more revealing was the letter Newt Gingrich distributed to members of GOPAC. In this letter, members were to use the following words to impart a negative image: decay, failure, sick, liberal, unionized, welfare, corrupt, greed and intolerant. The following words were to impart a positive imagine: share, legacy, control, truth, and courage.68
Cults are inherently fascist in nature. The leader demands total submersion into the cult. America today has seen far too many examples of cults and cult behavior. A recent example, would be the Waco incident that ended badly. However, there are several right wing groups that do exhibit cult behavior besides the religious groups; the LaRouchians, many of the militias, and the Order would all qualify as cults. In addition, much of the hard right inside the Republican Party has taken on a cult like behavior in their idolizing Reagan. The 105th Congress renamed the Washington airport after him. In the present Congress Congressman Matt Salmmon of Arizona has introduced a bill to deface Mt Rushmore by adding Reagan's imagine to the monument.69
It has been shown beyond any reasonable doubt that Hitler and the Nazis were right wing extremists best described as social darwinists, the antithesis of socialism. It was showed that the Nazis were best described by syndicalism model and that syndicalism is neither socialistic nor capitalistic, inherently. Syndicalism can be either depending upon the makeup; the Nazis were definitely capitalists in that there was no input from labor. All input was reserved for the industrialist. Further, it was shown that the industrialists openly defied Nazi desires in the case of the use of low-grade ores. It was also shown that many of the businesses that was government owned were taken over by the government prior to the Nazis, some dating all the way from the monarchy. Likewise, it was shown that many of the Nazi programs would be classified as corporate welfare today. And it was shown that the real power behind the Nazi movement was the top elitist. This should be sufficient for anyone to dispel the myth that the Nazis were socialist, when in fact they were capitalistic extremists.
In defining fascism, three traits stand above all others, totalitarian, nationalism, and extreme corporatism. In fact, one can not have fascism without corporatism. Other traits of fascism, such as destructive divisionism and the use of violence are secondary. As fascist ideology evolved in the later half of the 20th Century, a happy face was put on fascism by its leaders as they down played the violence and racism. This can be seen best in the far right wing extremist groups currently active in the United States.
Additionally, there is one fact that absolutely places the Nazis and fascism in the extreme right wing portion of the political spectrum, and not the left. No one disputes that a communist revolution attacks the ruling elite of a country. Similarly, socialism and liberalism also attacks the same ruling elite, but the right wing extremists try to claim the opposite. In reality these systems merely seek methods to ease the burden and allow the lower classes to prosper rather than attacking the elite. The Nazis, on the other hand, did not attack the ruling elite of Germany. The rich industrialists were allowed to continue their ways, eased by laws that the Nazis enacted for their benefit. Likewise, the nobility of Germany was supported by the Nazis. In short, the Nazis adopted the ruling elite in Germany and supported them, the exact opposite of what a left leaning political ideology would support.

There is no better proof of the Nazi support for the ruling elite than looking at who supported Hitler in the 1930s in America. Granted, many lower class people were involved in the pro-Hitler movement just as in Germany. But like Germany, it was the rich industrialists that funded these groups. Hearst ordered his newspapers to print pro-Nazi articles. In fact, he had them print the Nazi propaganda directly from Gobbels. Irenee du Pont funded several pro-fascist groups. Henry Ford was well known for his praise of Hitler and funded many pro-Nazis in the 30s. Andrew Mellon and John D. Rockefeller were supporters of Hitler as well. No one is foolish enough to argue that these men were not part of the ruling elite or rich industrialists in America at the time. In fact, support for Hitler among the rich industrialists was rampant.
The continued propagation of such nonsense by the present right wing is nothing short of propaganda. It fits closely with the Nazis' use of propaganda and the symbolism proposed by Gingrich and his negative words. nor will it change the history of the right wing support of the Nazis.

cash is king today. its in shortage. people want it. if gold was so desirable, all extra stocks would be exhausted by now.

Not only that, but you can bury gold for an how many people are willing to bury their gold for decades:) cash is king in a deflating economy.

that still does not refute what i have been saying. gold is deflationary in nature, gold has never stopped a currency from being debased, gold has never stopped inflation, gold and silver have caused inflation, gold can make a recession, into a depression. cash is in shortage right now, cash is king, the owners of gold, will gladly sell you their gold, for your worthless little pieces of green paper, in a deflating economy, you might be forced into selling your over priced assets(gold), at a reduced price to raise scarce cash to pay your bills. refute them.

• Socialism and Nazism
Nazism and socialism refers to a polemical, and political claim that Nazism, or the "German National Socialism" of the 1930s to mid 1940s is comparable in some way to the ideology of socialism. Political figures —in the US, Britain, and elsewhere —may at times employ the comparison as a rhetorical device aimed at discrediting pro-labor and otherwise socially liberal platforms, by implying a guilt by association between socialist economic philosophy and the tyrannical rule of Adolf Hitler and the Nazis.
While the claim has little meaning among educated scholars, the argument has some social resonance among "layman majorities" who tend to be less able to discern (or have less access to) factual claims and materials related to history and economics —easy to sway with polemic rhetoric, even if the claim has little substance or merit.

The definition of Nazism
The name "National Socialist German Workers Party," was a misnomer, much like the "Peoples Republic of China," the "Union of Soviet Socialist Republics," the "German Democratic Republic" and the "Liberal Democratic Party of Russia." Few would argue that any of the above countries were infact democracies or republics, and it is to this above category that the Hitlerian self-image as a "National Socialist German Workers Party," belongs.
The shortened term, "National Socialism," is a misnomer as well, and by itself simply means a 'nationalist flavor of socialism.' But because it is a very general term, it has some current resonance in popular discourse —particularly when it's used synonymously with Nazism.
It's polemical use within Western capitalist societies, is designed to evoke the twin demons of Naziism and (Soviet) "socialism," perhaps generating a Pavlovian response to the common "enemy", in this case .
The accusation of political liberals as "socialists," (and hence by implication "Nazis" and "Soviets Communists") is a rather typical and well-documented cornerstone of conservative rhetoric in the United States and other capitalist democracies. (See smear campaign, Red scare, McCarthyism)
The Nazi party-appropriated-term "socialism," like "democracy" in the cases above, was used to appeal to German workers for political support during the tentative early years of Hitler's ascent to power. Apart from the occasional use of empty pro-worker political rhetoric,

Adolf Hitler and his Nazi party had no inclination towards true socialism, in the sense (democratic socialism) that it's used today. Within the context of Hitler's unified, "racially-pure" Germany, Hitler instituted and supported social programs that on their surface had socialist structure. For example, his youth programs, education and indoctrination programs, reproduction programs, all borrowed some of their structure from existing "socialist" ideas, but insead of keeping the democratic spirit of socialist ideals, he simply borrowed what was popular to serve is quest for power. Whatever appeals Nazism made to the German worker, family, culture, and society —while in a very general sense were socialist —they were simply components in the totalitarian rule of the Nazi party.
The claim that socialism and nazism are one in the same are an example of the ignatoriao ilenchi fallacy —for example, the same could be said of the United States military industrial complex, which operates with socialist/communist-like safeguards and protections, though its a part of a capitalist system.

Ad-Hominem
The term Nazism typically has such a bad name that to link it to anything tends to tarnish the reputation of that other thing. A "law" of internet culture called Godwin's Law humorously states that whoever first brings up Hitler or the Nazis in a usenet discussion automatically loses the argument.
[1] [2] (tarring them with the same brush, as it were). Those who see a connection insist that rather then being driven by ideology, they seek only greater accuracy in political science.

Reasons Nazism is considered socialist

• Self-depiction: the German Nazi Party called itself the "National Socialist Worker's Party", and in 1927, Hitler said, "We are socialists."
• The Left Wing (examples include Gregor Strasser and Ernst Röhm), and working class brownshirts (or Sturmabteilung) within the Nazi Party supported socialist programs.
•
• One writer, Lew Rockwell at the Ludwig von Mises Institute, suggests that the chief difference beween Nazism and (as he puts it) others forms of socialism is that the Hitler's socialism was nationalistic while other forms (such as Communism) were internationalist. [3]

Reasons Nazism is not considered socialist

• Throughout its rise to power and rule, the Nazis were strongly opposed by left-wing and socialist parties, and Nazi rhetoric was virulently anti-Marxist, attacking both communists and social democrats. A central appeal of Nazism was its opposition to Marxism and other forms of socialism and its claim to be a bulwark against Bolshevism and this is why they recieved so much material and political support from industrialists and conservatives.

• The Nazi ideology saw socialist collectivism as part of a Jewish conspiracy (Judeo-Bolshevism) meant to undermine the elitist principle.
•
• Nazis proposed that only people who were considered "racially pure" or Aryan would benefit from their policies. This can be seen as contrary to the socialist ideal of a society for the benefit of all.
• In his rise to power, Hitler reassured German industrialists that he would respect private property and fight labor unions. To the extent that permitting private property to exist is contrary to "socialism", then Nazism was not "socialist". On the other hand, some democratic countries (like Sweden) have adopted some (but not all) socialist ideas while retaining a degree of freedom to own private property and have labor unions.
•
• Hitler received strong support from conservatives for the "Enabling Act." This legislation was opposed by social democrats.
•
• After coming to power, Hitler sent thousand of communists, social democrats and unionists to concentration camps and killed communist leaders in Germany. He outlawed labor unions and guaranteed corporate profits for Krupp & Co.
•
• The profits of large corporations soared under the Nazis. With the exception of Jewish property which was seized and sold, capitalist enterprises were not expropriated or nationalised but remained in private hands.
•
• The Nazis were anti-egalitarian believing in neither equality (either among Germans or between Germans and non-Germans), collectivism, nor the rights of the "masses". According to Hitler biographer Ian Kershaw they had an elitist view of society and asserted that in competition with each other the superior individual would emerge on top. Despite the use of slogans such as "the common good comes before the private good" their vision of social relations, in practice, was in line with the ideas of Nietzche rather than Karl Marx.
• During the party's ascendency in the 1930s, so called "left wing" Nazis such as Gregor Strasser and Ernst Röhm were ruthlessly purged and even killed.

Wages have risen in terms of the Fed trading stamps that we are now compelled to use instead of money, but nowhere near as much as prices have.

That is because the boobs are easily fooled into thinking, because there's an extra zero after the dollar amount on their paycheck now, that they're actually making "more money." What they forget is that the dollar, in the same period, has fallen well below the value of a five-cent piece in the days when America was still a nation.

But, boobs were apparently born to be fooled -- and a lot more of them are being born these days than ever.

The biggest victims of this theft, this con game on an gigantic scale, are those who worked their lives away for a retirement, or whole life insurance, or annuities, or other fixed assets that are denominated in dollars.

The money that the banks pumped into the securitized real estate casino, and the money that Barack Hussein Fetchit spends on his "social programs" and "aid" to Israel, and the money that pays for the Predator drones that incinerate whole apartment blocks full of innocent people in Pakistan, was largely stolen from them.

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

You're partly right. The gold standard by itself doesn't prevent bankers or politicians from irresponsibly creating money out of nothing.

But it does provide some discipline. You have to be able to pay out real money to those few depositors who actually request it.

Although there were manias, panics, and recessions due to the ability of the fractional reserve banking system to create credit dollars even under a gold standard, those up and down variations were centered around a fairly stable baseline.

The years from 1790 to 1913 saw a remarkably stable price structure compared to the years since. Around the time that the bankers wrested total control of the currency from Congress with their Federal Reserve, the curve describing the value of the soiled pieces of paper with the word "dollar" printed on them began to go down, down, down, and now there is no end in sight.

The way to end this theft need not necessarily involve a metallic standard, though it might. But it does necessarily involve honest, honorable men. And these are in short supply, especially in Washington and on Wall Street.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

That is probably how children see things, I will give you that. But no, the owners of gold, which want to buy something, will trade you a portion of their gold for dollars so they can go get a home, a car, a yacht, an island, an airplane, etc.

The gold mines will gladly sell you gold, it is their business. Gold, for the most part, stays in places such as fort knox (yeah, I know, it is empty, or else someone elses gold is stored there) or the large holdings in china, middle east, etc. in large storage areas. Just like people with money, people with gold have to trade part of their wealth for things they purchase. People also go broke on large gambles, and supplies of gold come onto the market.

Gold is a way to secure and hold wealth in a stable form, where years, decades, centuries, etc. it can be liquidated and spent and used.

You logic of "people with gold would hang on to their gold" is only as valid as "people with dollars would hang on to their dollars." Both of these statements are correct, you only get gold or dollars when they are spent ...

Gold works just as any other currency or medium of exchange. You can scam people with stocks, bonds, dollars, etc. Naturally, you can do it with gold also ...

Truth is, the wealthy have large holding of gold and other valuable metals. They don't wish the slaves to have them. You are one of those slaves who just doesn't realize the game ...

That is because you will never see anything as a valid repudiation of the things you wish to believe. That is only obivious ... and the last 30 to 40 years of the present system is what has ruined America. And, that system has been kept in operation by BOTH republi-crats and demo-cans; It will remain so ... perhaps Ron Paul, or such a man with such beliefs can change things. But, the entrenched powers which be are so abhorrent to change which would free the financially enslaved will never allow that. Even if they must bring down many more buildings, assassinate many more people, cause many more wars, steal more oil, sell more drugs, etc., etc.

Here we go, again ... as I stated, nothing will ever be good enough to repudiate anything you believe. You have chosen to believe what you choose to believe and that is that ... I accept that, indeed, don't feel alone. How do you think we got here, why do you think we are staying here, and why do you think many believe we will be here in the future? It is because many have been brain washed like you and no amount of sanity, logic and reason will dislodge the mind-screwing which has been done by the system ... they haven't spent trillions on plans which don't work!

The recently coined term "liberal fascism" is nothing more than yet another attempt by the right wing propagandists to blame everything bad that ever happened in the world on liberalism. The corporatists can't come to an admission that the worst mass murderer ever in the world was one of them, so they try to make fascism into a left wing phenomenon in order to brainwash the lemmings.

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted to radical Islam."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it ,vould be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites. This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation.

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete rightness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

SUPPRESSION OF LABOR AND INDUSTRY

Fascism in Italy and Germany at first won the support of the wealthy classes, both landed and industrial... These people saw in Fascism a protection against the demands of farmers and other workers... Both regimes at first upheld the rights of private property... They subjected the working classes to a rigorous discipline... As soon as they were firmly established, the dictators began to limit profit, impose capital levies, and regulate business in great detail...

.....sound familiar?.....

THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent. Secret police spy on the whole population, and any casual remark against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... This is because within a year or so after a Fascist government takes power, vigorous opponents of the regime have either left the country, been killed or jailed...

(Both Fascist and Communist leaders make use of the police state... Every absolute government has used the police state to some degree... It was highly developed among the ancient Assyrians...)

EXTREME NATIONALISM

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

When you hear the Liberal Fascist propaganda that THEY are the true patriots then you know the time is near. Look for it!

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

George Adamski was a profiteering FRAUD out to make money by selling his sci-fi books claimed to be factual. Many things he claimed in them, such as present-time human habitation of Venus and Mars, have been completely disproven.

Yes, the government IS covering up the truth about the UFOs and aliens, but do those fascists EVER tell us the truth?

From all I've read, the aliens are not all human (though some appear so) and most are indifferent to our relatively primitive condition. They are here for their own purposes, as we would be if able to visit their planets. We are little more than lab rats, guinea pigs, to them. They abduct and do medical/genetic experiments on us and other Earth life forms.

They have long ago rejected such myths and superstitions as religion. They would not be so advanced had they not.

Some of their technology is beyond our comprehension, and some has been reverse-engineered by our scientists. Our early semiconductor technology may have been obtained from the 1947 Roswell NM UFO crash.

Some of the "kooks" that make the subject of UFOs and aliens appear to be the ravings of lunatics are paid government disinformation shills.

You have it correct, and such is our government. However, some are confused since the party can be referred to by two different names--republi-crat and demo-can ... but, in the shadows the same figure(s) pull the strings ...

that is not true. it can hold wealth sometimes, sometimes it leads to massive wealth loss. and it pays no income or dividends, its a very poor way to hold wealth. anyone who bought gold in the early 80's can testify to that.

this article says it all, you still have not beaten a checking account.

gold is a lousy investment, cash is scare in a deflating economy, cash is king:since 1980:Gold Can’t Beat Checking Accounts 30 Years After Peak, average U.S. checking account rose at least 92 percent. On an inflation-adjusted basis, gold investors are still 79 percent away from getting their money back

Gold Can’t Beat Checking Accounts 30 Years After Peak (Update1)

By Nicholas Larkin and Millie Munshi

Dec. 7 (Bloomberg) -- Gold’s best year in three decades has yet to match the returns of an interest-bearing checking account for anyone who bought the most malleable of metals coveted for at least 5,000 years during the last peak in January, 1980.
Investors who paid $850 an ounce back then earned 44 percent as gold reached a record $1,226.56 on Dec. 3 in London. The Standard & Poor’s 500 stock index produced a 22-fold return with dividends reinvested, Treasuries rose 11-fold and cash in the average U.S. checking account rose at least 92 percent. On an inflation-adjusted basis, gold investors are still 79 percent away from getting their money back.
“You give up a lot of return for the privilege of sleeping well at night,” said James Paulsen, who oversees about $375 billion as chief investment strategist at Wells Capital Management in Minneapolis. “If the world falls into an abyss, gold could be a store of value. There is some merit in that, but you can end up holding too much gold waiting for the world to end. From my experience, the world has not ended yet.”
While gold’s nine-year bull market is attracting hedge-fund managers John Paulson, Paul Tudor Jones and David Einhorn, strategists and fund managers at Barclays Plc, HSBC Holdings Plc, SCM Advisors LLC and Brinker Capital Inc. say buy-and-hold investors shouldn’t always own bullion. The accumulation of gold is part of a record $60 billion Barclays estimates will flow into commodities this year.
Hoarding Bullion
The SPDR Gold Trust, the biggest exchange-traded fund backed by bullion, has amassed more metal than Switzerland’s central bank, spurred by a plunging dollar and concern that the at least $12 trillion of government spending to lift economies out of the worst global recession since World War II will spur inflation. The collapse of U.S. real estate in 2007 froze credit markets and left the world’s biggest financial companies with $1.72 trillion of losses and writedowns, data compiled by Bloomberg show.
The U.S. Mint suspended production last month of some American Eagle coins made from precious metals because of depleted inventories. The U.K.’s Royal Mint more than quadrupled production of gold coins in the third quarter. Harrods Ltd., the London department store, began selling gold bars and coins for the first time in October.

Those sales contributed to a 30 percent rally in gold this year, beating the 25 percent gain in the S&P 500, with dividends reinvested, and a 2.4 percent drop in Treasuries. Investors bought gold as the U.S. economy, the world’s biggest, shrank 3.8 percent in the 12 months ended in June, the worst performance in seven decades. Gross domestic product expanded at a 2.8 percent annual rate in the third quarter.
Longest Winning Streak
A weakening dollar also contributed to bullion’s longest winning streak since at least 1948. The U.S. Dollar Index, a measure against six counterparts, dropped in six of the last eight years, including a 6.6 percent decline in 2009, bolstering demand for a hedge. Gold fell 1.6 percent to $1,143 an ounce by 11:08 a.m. in London. Before today, the metal had risen 32 percent this year, the most since 1979.
Buy-and-hold investors may not have done so well. One dollar put into a U.S. checking account in 1983 would be worth at least $1.92 today, based on annual average interest rates from Bankrate.com. The Federal Reserve target rate from 1980 to 1982 was 8.5 percent to 20 percent. Banks were paying 5 percent on the accounts in January 1981, according to a report in the New York Times.
Dividends Reinvested
The S&P 500 returned 2,182 percent from the beginning of 1980 through the end of the third quarter this year, according to data compiled by Bloomberg. The calculation assumes dividends reinvested on a gross basis. Treasuries returned 1,089 percent through the beginning of this month, according to Merrill Lynch’s Treasury Master Index.
“Gold is a useless asset to hold long term,” said Charles Morris, who manages more than $2 billion at HSBC Global Asset Management’s Absolute Return fund in London. “I’m not a gold bug who believes that you want to own this thing in your portfolio at all times. We should own it when the going is good, and the going right now is great.”
Those who bought gold when it reached a two-decade low of $251.95 in August 1999 have seen a 387 percent return, more than four times the 82 percent gain in Treasuries. An investment in the S&P 500 lost 0.4 percent through the end of last month. Interest on checking accounts shrank to 0.14 percent this year from 0.89 percent in 1999.
Since the S&P 500 peaked in October 2007, investors in the index lost 25 percent, holders of Treasuries made 16 percent and gold buyers are up 64 percent.
‘Very Conservative Investments’
“There are people that just stayed in very conservative investments in cash and government bonds,” said Larry Hatheway, global head of asset allocation at UBS AG in London, who recommends investors hold about 1 percent of their assets in bullion. “Surely they would have been a lot better off being in gold.”
Buying bullion at $35 when U.S. President Richard Nixon abandoned the gold standard in 1971 would have given a 35-fold return, about the same performance as the S&P 500.

Gold will average $1,070 next year, according to the median in a Bloomberg survey of 19 analysts. The metal may jump to $2,000 in the next five years, said HSBC's Morris. Ian Henderson, manager of $5 billion at JPMorgan Chase & Co., said he's adding to his gold-related holdings because of "the momentum behind it." Jim Rogers, the investor who predicted the start of the commodities rally in 1999, has said bullion will surge to at least $2,000 over the next decade.
Touradji Capital
"Our sense is that this bubble is more at the beginning stages than on the brink of collapse," said Thomas Wilson, head of the institutional and private client group at Brinker Capital in Berwyn, Pennsylvania, which manages about $8.5 billion.
Touradji Capital Management LP, the New York hedge fund founded by Paul Touradji, bought 2.23 million shares of Barrick Gold Corp., the world's biggest producer, during the third quarter, according to a Nov. 13 filing with regulators. The stake, Touradji's biggest equity holding, is worth $95 million.
Paulson & Co., the hedge-fund firm run by billionaire Paulson, will start a gold fund on Jan. 1 investing in mining companies and bullion-related derivatives, according to a person familiar with the plan.
Einhorn, who runs New York-based Greenlight Capital Inc., told a presentation in New York in October that he's buying gold to bet against the dollar.
Paul Tudor Jones, in an Oct. 15 letter to clients of his Tudor Investment Corp., said gold is "just an asset that, like everything else in life, has its time and place. And now is that time."
Net Gold Buyers
Central banks will become net buyers of gold this year for the first time since 1988, according to New York-based researcher CPM Group. India, China, Russia, Sri Lanka and Mauritius have all added to their reserves.
Gold should be held when governments cease to function and currencies are worthless, or when inflation is surging, said Brian Nick, a New York-based investment strategist at Barclays Wealth, which manages $221 billion. He doesn't recommend increasing gold holdings, which are a "very small" part of commodity allocations.
Inflation has yet to accelerate. U.S. consumer prices will rise 2 percent next year, the smallest expansion since 2002, according to the median estimate of 63 economists surveyed by Bloomberg. Prices will shrink 0.4 percent this year.
'Knee-Jerk Reaction'
"People have this knee-jerk reaction and say that you want gold as a hedge against inflation," said Maxwell Bublitz, who helps oversee $3.5 billion as the chief strategist at San Francisco-based SCM Advisors LLC and recommends investors hold no more than 5 percent of their assets in the metal. "But the history of gold in regard to inflation shows that it's not a great hedge."
Investors seeking to protect themselves against inflation should buy commodities, which are cheaper than gold, said Wells Capital's

Paulsen. Copper, after more than doubling this year, is still 28 percent away from the record $8,940 a metric ton reached in July 2008.
“Theoretically, it does have a spot in portfolios, a small one,” Bublitz said. “You’re probably going to get entry points that are a lot better than where gold is now.”

we are not facing hyper-inflation at the moment, and have not been facing it for a couple of years now. in fact, we are facing deflation.
in deflation, cash is scarce, and cash is king. what is everybody short of right now, well, its cash. so spend your scarce cash on gold.

in a free market economy, where the wealthy are vastly under taxed, the wealthy will take their money out of productive activities that they were forced into by a progressive tax, and put said money in non-productive things such as antiques and other things that they think will hold value in a depression. of course that is the wrong way to do things, and invites a depression, and antiques and other so-called hedges that were, or still are in a bubble due to under taxation, plummet. just look at the antique artwork these days, the bubbles popped, and prices have deflated.
the same will happen to gold and other commodities sooner or later.
cash will become even more scarce, and those commodities will have to be sold at fire sale pieces to raise scarce cash to pay bills.

not really, i am a liberal, liberals are open minded. i own gold, i did back in the early 1970's. but after many years of watching the gold market. i have come to the conclusion that its really a poor investment. that investment is being driven by fear, the same fear that conservatives are so successful with the ignorant. i hope gold goes thru the roof, then i will sell mine that i bought almost 40 years ago. otherwise, its been a really poor investment, a real money loser. like any other bubble, yes gold is in a massive bubble right now. you have to be lucky enough to get out when the getting is good.

You attempt to make gold and the actions and transactions surrounding gold one and the same ... they are not ... gold is gold ... paper is paper ... scams are scams ... other than money being a representation of gold, a heavy substance hard to carry, gold has little to do with scams which can be created to steal wealth or the fact a dollar actual worth is the paper and ink ...

Gold is an excellent investment to hold wealth in a stable form, indeed, only precious metals will work for that. An OZ of gold in 1849 would buy a very nice suit, today in 2010 it still will buy that very nice suit ... indeed, it will even buy a nicer suit today. A $20 bill might buy you a polyester tie to go with that suit (and look tacky!)

its called projecting. hitler and mussolini turned german and italian society upside down, murder became legal, theft became legal, slavery became legal, and were all viewed upon as admirable ways to make a living. conservatives are doing the same thing today to american society. night is day, day is night, black is white, white is black.

Free market? There is no such thing, hasn't been for half a century or more. Just start looking at the rules and regulations which cause the system to be molded in fine detail and you will know this is fact ... the tax code itself consists of many volumes and stacked, vertically, upon the floor, stands taller than me, I suspect ... and the is but a tiny fraction of the rules and regulations governing wealth, finances, banking, commerce, etc. ... get real.

I am for tearing up ALL government. I am for interpreting the Constitution though the interpretation which would be held by rational, logical and reasoning average Americans--the same which accepted and held the Constitution to be valid in the first place--rule by majority of the people, and absolute rule by the people, whos' will is carried out by their public servants. I believe most of the congressmen, senators and the president should be jailed and charged with crimes of treason against the people.

I am simply here waiting the revolution ... be it peaceful, or not ... but things need to be put back in order.

It is so trivial, it boggles the mind. The same money lenders in the temples, since ancient times, their bloodlines, their motivations, their methods, etc., etc. are still alive and well today ... the weapons which work against them are still just as effective. As then, only men of principal and real worth are necessary to end their influence ... the process was last instituted, on a grand scale, here in 1776, let us hope it is instituted again, and soon.

i am glad you brought up rome. rome was a super power till it went on the gold standard, then it was all down hill from there. when they

if you embrace fascism, do not be to surprised if you are labeled one. you just threw the constitution into the garbage, and wanted to kill your opponents. something that fascists, as well as marxist are really good at.
i see little difference between a free market economy(fascism), and a communist economy(marxism), in either system, almost all wealth and power ends up in the hands of a few.

My aluminum wheels on my 1996 4-wdrive have been exposed to every bad corrosive process the elements can come up with, acid raid and road salt just to mention a couple ... a radio in my home would fair much better; And, the rims still look excellent!

I love it when someone mentions a non-issue ... however, I do have some old military equipment in the basement which is aluminum cased. It would have to be polished and repainted ... was made in the 1940's.

I guess wood cases has an attraction for some, not me. I even like my laptops in an aluminum case ... this time I couldn't find one. They have ALL (well, except one MAC I found) to plastic ... perhaps you would favor a computer in a wood case? Maybe pull one apart and stuff it in a cigar box ... I wonder how long before all cigar boxes become plastic?

you do not have to prove it to me. i know it was all free market all the way. however, if you can prove it, you will be a rich man. i have shown this offer to many conservatives, not one seems to have the

Get Me ReWrite! By Barry Ritholtz - May 13th, 2010, 7:20AM My approach to everything I have written, studied and analyzed in this space is pretty straight forward: Start with the data and evidence and go forward from there. Figure out what the “Truth” is; try to get as close to the objective reality beneath the noise in order to make intelligent investing decisions for myself and my clients. There are others who do not share this objective. Their goals are either political (winning the next election) or ideological (having their belief system become dominant). Truth is irrelevant to these people. Not surprisingly, these folks — many of whom contributed to the crisis in a might way — are desperately trying to duck responsibility for what happened. Those who helped cause the crisis are engaged in an ongoing effort to rewrite its history. Their goal? Exonerate their own bad behavior, throw off any responsibility to the collapse, blame anything but their own ideology and horrific decision making. They want to keep pushing their tired political agendas, despite the damage they may have caused. When writing Bailout Nation, I tried to steer clear of partisan finger pointing. I kept the focus on what actually occurred, what could be proven mathematically. I blamed Democrats and Republicans — not equally, but in proportion to their what they did. Unsupported theories, tenuous connection, loose affiliations were not part of the

Every legislative change, each regulatory failure, all corporate actions, to be blameworthy, had to manifest themselves in actual mathematical proof. This led me to ascertain the following 30 year sequence: -Free market absolutism becomes the dominant intellectual thought. -Deregulation of markets, investment houses, and banks becomes a broad goal: This led to Glass Steagall repeal, Derivative exemptions, Investing house leverage exemptions, and a new breed of unregulated non bank lenders. -Legislative actions reduce or eliminate much of the regulatory oversight; SEC funding is weakened. -Rates come down to absurd levels. -Bond managers madly scramble for yield. -Derivatives, non-bank lending, leverage, bank size, compensation levels all run away from prior levels. - Wall Street securitizes whatever it can to satisfy the demand for higher yields. -"Lend to securitize" nonbank mortgage writers sell enormous amounts of subprime loans to Wall Street for this purpose. -To meet this demand, non bank lenders collapse lending standards, leading to a credit bubble. -The Fed approves of this innovation. -Housing booms, then busts -Credit freeze, market collapse recession. You will note that the CRA is not part of this sequence. I could find no evidence that they were a cause or even a minor factor. If they were, the housing bubbles would not have been in California or S. Florida or Ls Vegas or Arizona — Harlem and South Philly and parts of Chicago and Washington DC would have been the focus. Nor do I blame Fannie and Freddie. Now understand, there is no love lost between myself and the GSEs. For years, I have called them "Phoney and Fraudy." Since George Bush and Hank Paulson nationalized them, I have accused the government of using these two as a backdoor bailout for banks — a hidden PPIP/TARP used to buy all the garbage mortgages that banks are desperate to get off their balance sheets. Longtime readers will recall we very publicly shorted Fannie based upon their fraudulent practices and horrific balance sheet. But even I cannot reconcile the movement to place all of the world's troubles at the feet of the GSEs. Not, at least, according to the data. That lack of evidence, however, doesn't stop ideologues from making the attempt. Consider this attempt at rewriting the causes of the credit crisis by Kevin Hassett: "The worst financial crisis in generations was set off by a massive government effort, led by the two mortgage giants, to make loans to homebuyers no matter whether they could make the payments. Lenders were willing to lend money to just about all comers, no matter how low their income. Why? Because the lenders knew Fannie and Freddie would purchase the loans from them for a high price before bundling them into securities to sell to investors." Now, this makes for a fascinating narrative that plays into a number of different ideological beliefs. It exonerates the radical free market deregulators, it ignores what the private sector did, and it somehow ignores the fact that Congress was controlled by a very conservative GOP from 1994 to 2006 — the prime period of time covered leading up to and including the beginning of the crisis. But worse than all of that, the data supporting Hassett's position simply isn't there. Over the past 2 years, I have repeatedly asked the people who push this narrative to provide some evidence for their positions. I have offered a $100,000 if they could prove their case. Specifically, I have requested some data or evidence that DISPROVED the following facts: -The origination of subprime loans came primarily from non bank lenders not covered by the CRA; -The majority of the underwriting, at leats fro the first few years of the boom, were by these same non-bank lenders -When the big banks began chasing subprime, it was due to the profit motive, not any mandate from the President (a Republican) or the the Congress (Republican controlled) or the GSEs they oversaw. -Prior to 2005, nearly all of these sub-prime loans were bought by Wall Street — NOT Fannie & Freddie -In fact, prior to 2005, the GSEs were not permitted to purchase non-conforming mortgages. -After 2005, Fannie & Freddie changed their own rules to start buying these non-conforming mortgages — in order to maintain market share and compete with Wall Street for profits. -The change in FNM/FRE conforming mortgage purchases in 2005 was not due to any legislation or marching orders from the President (a Republican) or the the Congress (Republican controlled). It was the profit motive that led them to this action. These are data supported facts I pounded on in BN. Of course, folks like Hassett hate this factual history, as it conflicts with their goals and politics. Rather than produce evidence, they create story lines unsupported by facts. But Monkeys love a good narrative, and so they give that to them. However, as an investor, I demand evidence, data and facts. The blame Fannie & Freddie crowd have managed to remain blissfully data free. They have steadfastly ignored all calls for proof. Its way past the time to call out their intellectual dishonesty. If you cannot show any data, if you cannot prove what you are alleging with actual facts, you need to be called out for what it is you actually are: Proponents of a failed philosophy. http://www.ritholtz.com/blog/2010/05/rewriting-the-causes-of-the-cred...

Homeowners' Rebellion: Recent Rulings Could Shield 62 Million Homes
From Foreclosure
Thursday 19 August 2010
by: Ellen Brown, t r u t h o u t | News Analysis Over 62 million mortgages are now held in the name of MERS, an electronic recording system devised by and for the convenience of the mortgage industry. A California bankruptcy court, following landmark cases in other jurisdictions, recently held that this electronic shortcut breaks the chain of title, voiding foreclosure. The logical result could be 62 million homes that are foreclosure proof.
In a Newsweek article a year ago called "Too Big to Jail: Why Prosecutors Won't Hit Wall Street Hard in the Subprime Scandal," Michael Hirsch wrote that we were unlikely to see trials and convictions like those in the savings and loan scandals of the 1980s, because fraud and blame have been so widespread that there is no one to single out and jail. Said Hirsch:
"The sad irony is that in pleading collective guilt, most of Wall Street will escape whipping for a scheme that makes Bernie Madoff's shenanigans look like pickpocketing. At the crest of the real-estate bubble, fraud was systemic and Wall Street had essentially gone into the loan-sharking business."
"Unfortunately," he added, "prosecution of fraud is the only way you're going to get reform on Wall Street."
Sure enough, a year later we got a banking reform bill that was so watered down that Wall Street got nearly everything it wanted. The too-big-to-fails, rather than being whittled down to size, have grown even bigger, circumventing antitrust laws; and they are being allowed to carry on pretty much as before. The Federal Reserve, rather than being called on the carpet, has been given even more power; and the Consumer Protection Agency - the main part of the bill with teeth - has been put under the Fed's watchful eye. Congress and the Justice Department seem to have bowed out, leaving no one to hold the finance industry to account.
But the best laid plans even of Wall Street can sometimes go awry. In an ironic twist, the industry may wind up tripping over its own Achilles heel, the Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems or MERS.
An online computer software program for tracking mortgage ownership and rights, MERS is, according to its web site, "an innovative process that simplifies the way mortgage ownership and servicing rights are originated, sold and tracked. Created by the real estate finance industry, MERS eliminates the need to prepare and record assignments when trading residential and commercial mortgage loans." Or as Karl Denninger puts it, "MERS own website claims that it exists for the purpose of circumventing assignments and documenting ownership!"

MERS was developed in the early 1990s by a number of financial entities, including Bank of America, Countrywide, Fannie Mae, and Freddie Mac, allegedly to allow consumers to pay less for mortgage loans. That did not actually happen, but what MERS did allow was the securitization and shuffling around of mortgages behind a veil of anonymity. The result was not only to cheat local governments out of their recording fees, but to defeat the purpose of the recording laws, which was to guarantee purchasers clean title. Worse, MERS facilitated an explosion of predatory lending in which lenders could not be held to account because they could not be identified, either by the preyedupon borrowers or by the investors seduced into buying bundles of worthless mortgages. As alleged in a Nevada class action called Lopez v. Executive Trustee Services, et al.:
"Before MERS, it would not have been possible for mortgages with no market value ... to be sold at a profit or collateralized and sold as mortgage-backed securities. Before MERS, it would not have been possible for the Defendant banks and AIG to conceal from government regulators the extent of risk of financial losses those entities faced from the predatory origination of residential loans and the fraudulent re-sale and securitization of those otherwise non-marketable loans. Before MERS, the actual beneficiary of every Deed of Trust on every parcel in the United States and the State of Nevada could be readily ascertained by merely reviewing the public records at the local recorder's office where documents reflecting any ownership interest in real property are kept.…
"After MERS, ... the servicing rights were transferred after the origination of the loan to an entity so large that communication with the servicer became difficult if not impossible... . The servicer was interested in only one thing - making a profit from the foreclosure of the borrower's residence - so that the entire predatory cycle of fraudulent origination, resale and securitization of yet another predatory loan could occur again. This is the legacy of MERS and the entire scheme was predicated upon the fraudulent designation of MERS as the 'beneficiary' under millions of deeds of trust in Nevada and other states."
MERS now holds over 62 million mortgages in its name, including over half of all new US residential mortgage loans. But courts are increasingly ruling that MERS is merely a nominee, without standing to foreclose on the collateral that makes up a major portion of the portfolios of some very large banks. It seems the banks claiming to be the real parties in interest may have short circuited themselves out of the chain of title entitling them to the collateral.

Technicality or Fatal Flaw?
To foreclose on real property, the plaintiff must be able to produce a promissory note or assignment establishing title. Early cases focused on MERS' inability to produce such a note, but most courts continued to consider the note a mere technicality and ignored it. Landmark newer opinions, however, stress that this defect is not just a procedural. but a substantive failure, one that is fatal to the plaintiff's case.
The latest of these decisions came down in California on May 20, 2010, in a bankruptcy case called In re Walker, Case no. 10-21656-E-11. The court held that MERS could not foreclose because it was a mere nominee and that as a result plaintiff Citibank could not collect on its claim. The judge opined:
"Since no evidence of MERS' ownership of the underlying note has been offered and other courts have concluded that MERS does not own the underlying notes, this court is convinced that MERS had no interest it could transfer to Citibank. Since MERS did not own the underlying note, it could not transfer the beneficial interest of the Deed of Trust to another. Any attempt to transfer the beneficial interest of a trust deed without ownership of the underlying note is void under California law."
In support, the judge cited In re Vargas (California Bankruptcy Court), Landmark v. Kesler (Kansas Supreme Court), LaSalle Bank v.
Lamy (a New York case) and In re Foreclosure Cases (the "Boyko" decision from Ohio Federal Court). (For more on these earlier cases, see here, here and here.) The court concluded:
"Since the claimant, Citibank, has not established that it is the owner of the promissory note secured by the trust deed, Citibank is unable to assert a claim for payment in this case."
The broad impact the case could have on California foreclosures is suggested by attorney Jeff Barnes, who writes:
"This opinion ... serves as a legal basis to challenge any foreclosure in California based on a MERS assignment; to seek to void any MERS assignment of the Deed of Trust or the note to a third party for purposes of foreclosure; and should be sufficient for a borrower to not only obtain a TRO [temporary restraining order] against a

Trustee's Sale, but also a Preliminary Injunction barring any sale pending any litigation filed by the borrower challenging a foreclosure based on a MERS assignment."
While not binding on courts in other jurisdictions, the ruling could serve as persuasive precedent there as well, because the court cited nonbankruptcy cases related to the lack of authority of MERS, and because the opinion is consistent with prior rulings in Idaho and Nevada Bankruptcy courts on the same issue.
RICO and Fraud Charges
Other suits go beyond merely challenging title to alleging criminal activity. On July 26, 2010, a class action was filed in Florida seeking relief against MERS and an associated legal firm for racketeering and mail fraud. It alleges that the defendants used "the artifice of MERS to sabotage the judicial process to the detriment of borrowers"; that "to perpetuate the scheme, MERS was and is used in a way so that the average consumer, or even legal professional, can never determine who or what was or is ultimately receiving the benefits of any mortgage payments"; that the scheme depended on "the MERS artifice and the ability to generate any necessary 'assignment' which flowed from it"; and that "by engaging in a pattern of racketeering activity, specifically 'mail or wire fraud,' the Defendants ... participated in a criminal enterprise affecting interstate commerce."
Local governments deprived of filing fees may also be getting into the act, at least through representatives suing on their behalf. Qui tam actions allow for a private party or "whistle blower" to bring suit on behalf of the government for a past or present fraud on it. In State of California ex rel. Barrett R. Bates, filed May 10, 2010, the plaintiff qui tam sued on behalf of a long list of local governments in California against MERS and a number of lenders, including Bank of America, JPMorgan Chase and Wells Fargo, for "wrongfully bypass[ing] the counties' recording requirements; divest[ing] the borrowers of the right to know who owned the promissory note ...; and record[ing] false documents to initiate and pursue non-judicial foreclosures and to otherwise decrease or avoid payment of fees to the Counties and the Cities where the real estate is located." The complaint notes that "MERS claims to have 'saved' at least $2.4 billion dollars in recording costs," meaning it has helped avoid billions of dollars in fees otherwise accruing to local governments. The plaintiff sues for treble damages for all recording fees not paid during the past ten years and for civil penalties of between $5,000 and $10,000 for each unpaid or underpaid recording fee and each false document recorded during that period, potentially a hefty sum. Similar suits have been filed by the same plaintiff qui tam in Nevada and Tennessee.

Axing the Bankers' Money Tree

Most courts continue to look the other way on MERS' lack of standing to sue, but the argument has picked up enough steam to consider the rather stunning implications. If MERS is not the title holder of properties held in its name, the chain of title has been broken and no one may have standing to sue. In MERS v. Nebraska Department of Banking and Finance, MERS insisted that it had no actionable interest in title, and the court agreed.

An August 2010 article in Mother Jones titled "Fannie and Freddie's Foreclosure Barons" exposes a widespread practice of "foreclosure mills" in backdating assignments after foreclosures have been filed. Not only is this perjury, a prosecutable offense, but if MERS was never the title holder, there is nothing to assign. The defaulting homeowners could wind up with free and clear title.

In Florida, Jacksonville Area Legal Aid attorney April Charney has been using the missing-note argument ever since she first identified that weakness in the lenders' case in 2004. Five years later, she says, some of those homeowners are still in their homes. According to a Huffington Post article titled "'Produce the Note' Movement Helps Stall Foreclosures":

"Because of the missing ownership documentation, Charney is now starting to file quiet title actions, hoping to get her homeowner clients full title to their homes (a quiet title action 'quiets' all other claims). Charney says she's helped thousands of homeowners delay or prevent foreclosure and trained thousands of lawyers across the country on how to protect homeowners and battle in court."

If courts overwhelmed with foreclosures decide to take up the cause, the result could be millions of struggling homeowners with the banks off their backs and millions of homes no longer on the books of some too-big-to-fail banks. Without those assets, the banks could again be looking at bankruptcy, as was pointed out in a San Francisco Chronicle article by attorney Sean Olender following the October 2007 Boyko decision:

"The ticking time bomb in the US banking system is not resetting subprime mortgage rates. The real problem is the contractual ability of investors in mortgage bonds to require banks to buy back the loans at face value if there was fraud in the origination process.

"... The loans at issue dwarf the capital available at the largest US banks combined and investor lawsuits would raise stunning liability sufficient to cause even the largest US banks to fail...."

Nationalization of these giant banks might be the next logical step - a step that some commentators said should have been taken in the first place. When the banking system of Sweden collapsed following a housing bubble in the 1990s, nationalization of the banks worked out very well

for that country.
The Swedish banks were largely privatized again when they got back on their feet, but it might be a good idea to keep some banks as publicly-owned entities, on the model of the Commonwealth Bank of Australia. For most of the 20th century, it served as a "people's bank," making low interest loans to consumers and businesses through branches all over the country.
With the strengthened position of Wall Street following the 2008 bailout and the tepid 2010 banking reform bill, the US is far from nationalizing its mega-banks now. But a committed homeowner movement to tear off the predatory mask called MERS could yet turn the tide. While courts are not likely to let 62 million homeowners off scot-free, the defect in title created by MERS could give them significant new leverage at the bargaining table.

Let me point out right at the start that ALL valid marriages in the USA, and in most (if not even all) other countries are STATE-sanctions/authorized/legalized ones. Any additional religious component that accompany any of those weddings as an adjunct are ones that are ARTIFICIALLY and ABRIT-RARILY added to them by the CHOICE of the participants, and has ZERO legal standing.

It's like putting pepperoni on a pizza. The addition of the ingredient may cause the pizza to look and taste nicer to the one partaking of it -- but it in NO way changes the fact that it still is a PIZZA -- with or without the pepperoni.

People can embellish weddings to their heart's content with religious trappings -- but ALL marriages are 100% legal WITHOUT them. And no MORE legitimate because of them, when they are added as options.

A car with or without optional anti-lock brakes is still a CAR.

Any church/religious organization that is repressive, ignorant, or both to refuse to marry same-sex couples have the right to do so in every jurisdiction I've heard of, so it's NOT a church/state-separation issue. It could be one ONLY if the state were to REQUIRE clergy and/or churches/religious organizations to marry same-sex couples who cane to them for that purpose. There are NO such requirements anywhere, to the best of my knowledge. And where same-sex marriage is legal, as it is here in Iowa, same-sex couples have NO problem finding venues that are perfectly and sensibly willing to perform the ceremony for them, legally. In fact, here in Iowa, where there is NO residency requirement, same-sex couples are openly INVITED to come here to be married, and even are provided with such perks as wedding planning.

As I pointed out above, NO such problem exists for EITHER same-sex OR opposite-sex marriages. Churches are FREE to be doltishly restrictive and have laughingstock status. That's how I regard such repressive churches and cults, and I have as much a legal right to say that, per the First Amendment, as they have to refuse to perform weddings for some couples, per the SAME amendment.

ALL valid weddings and marriages are CIVIL ones.
Religious trappings are merely artificially and arbitrarily-added embellishments CHOSEN by the participant in the manner of adding a maraschino cherry to a sundae.
The addition or omission of those embellishments have absolutely ZERO effect upon those legality of those MARRIAGES. ALL legal marriages ARE marriages.
Same-sex or otherwise.

No -- because your comment is LUDICROUS as well as mindlessly bigoted, in the light of the FACTS I've provided above. When same-sex couples get married, that in NO WAY is the least bit detrimental to any one or any thing.

That is NOT true. (Even though I, personally, WISH that churches COULD be put into that position, as a counter to the outright bigotry and abject stupidity of those that DON'T yet perform marriages for same-sex couples in states where it is legal. And SHOULD be thus penalized. I would LOVE to see that happen -- but I

President Obama is WELL aware of the separation of church and state, and would NEVER have said that.

Incidentally, many churches and some of the denoninations DO willingly marry same-sex couples in places where same-sex couples are no longer legally EXCLUD-ED from marriage. Those fair and sensible churches are doing that by their own CHOICE. And it is their

Precisely. It is the distilled essence of hypocrisy, and RRR cultists are some of the world's most hypocritical loons. I'm betting that NO such sociopath will EVER be able to tell us just how any opposite-sex couple's marriage could possibly be harmed in the slightest if, for example, a same-sex couple living in their city who'd been cohabiting there for 20 years suddenly were able to become legally married, and then did so.

The notion that so-called "traditional" marriage is somehow being "threatened" by same-sex marriage is one of the RRR Cult's two most BLATANT lies.

It's against the law for government to tell a church what to do.
I say the 1866 equal protection law applies, as well as the 14th amendment.

The fascists are anti social and totally focused on the primacy of the state, adopting whatever religious overtones best serve.

You present an interesting point ...

Actually, the state has no reason to have anything to say about marriage between a man and a woman, the church has the only authority--if the government chooses to give tax breaks and other benefits because the church married me, so be it ... unless they claim powers above God, they had better damn well heed that authority.

But, then, it hardly matters; Who has respect for government anymore? And, who can say they are impressed with the populations respect for government? My respect was waning ever since nixon, then came regan, clinton and bush (well, and bush.) It was gone somewhere in between those blatant puppets.

My allegiance to country, community and Americans remains strong ... but government may as well consider me an outlaw now, I have gone rogue and will obey no law which does not clearly support God, liberty, freedom and the pursuit of happiness above all else ... somehow, I think there is a whole bunch of me, too. And, that I was actually a late comer on the scene.

Schiklegruber banned listening to ALL foreign radio stations. This applied to both AM and SW . Why would anybody try to glorify him in

Hi,

I have a Drake R8, still works, had it a long time.

I've searched around some and have not seen any shortwaves out there that have all the features this old tank has.

Does anybody know what is comparable to the R8 ?

If you have not used one of these here are a few features... filters .5, 1.8, 2.3, 4, 6 khz cw,rtty,lsb,usb,am,fm AM syncro audio tone & notch squelch, passband tuning 10, 100, 1000 hz digital AGC fast,slow on off timer dual antenna auto scan 100 memory

Harry

That is correct. Copper is the most necessary and valuable metal out there. Invest in copper. Modern society is using more copper than ever.

Aluminum corrodes ,like almost any other metal,when exposed to acid rain/salwater. My 50 year-old R-648 /ARR41 (was forced to sell it at one point) was kept indoors and was absolutely immaculate cosmetically . It didn't look like an alloy or anodized at all.

Hava a look at an Icom IC-7200. It's a third generation DSP receiver and works just champion, at a great price too.
It's several miles ahead of the old R8.

If you are talking about ham transceivers then the market is wide open.

The new Ten-Tec Eagle is a real contender, although it is close to the price of an R8 or Kenwood R-5000 when they were new. That's a lot of money these days.

Don't be fooled by the spec that there is "degraded performance" outside the ham bands. Even with the degraded performance, as it were, it's still quite a good receiver. Note the manual is unclear, you don't need to have the add-on AM or FM filters for recepetion, only if you want to transmit using those modes.

The ICOM IC-706 is a good one too, especially if you get the latest version with all the DSP features. It's not much more than half the price of the Ten-Tec and Geoff.

This has all the features you list and way more. About $2,000 will get you a radio better than a TenTec RX340; better than a WJ-1000, and 20 years better than an R8. You can save a couple bills by putting it together yourself.

A ham-bands centric receiver with an 8 or 9 MHz I.F. can receive HFBC frequencies, but with varying degrees of degraded performance due to the bandpass filtering in the front end. Elecraft offers an optional set of General Coverage bandpass filters which are automatically switched into the signal path when scanning outside the ham bands.

The TenTec doesn't offer that option at first glance.

I don't work at Elecraft, just supporting a home-grown business a few miles up the El Camino Real (aka US Rt 101) who happens to build the best receiver anywhere at any price. It is a tiny company run by a handful of people serving a fiercely obsessed niche market. Good example for the kids.

If you motherboard doesn't advertise itself as having a serial port it won't have those pins.

If it does advertise itself as having a serial port it'll come with the necessary connector, or possibly it'll be an optional extra.

At least some motherboards still come with a serial port on the back panel but don't expect to see it often in the future. On this computer I am currently using, I have one on the back panel but no internal header. It matters not as I always turn serial ports off in the BIOS. No point in having them use up valuable interrupts if they aren't used. I turn the parallel ports off in the BIOS as well.

The only devices I ever saw using serial ports on computers generally were modems and printers. Even the printers went to parallel in the early days. After a while even modems were fitted internally on a card used an ISA or a PCI slot. The terminals on the very early computers used a serial connection but they were no longer used in my office by the mid 80s.

The serial port sees so little use (when fitted) that most computers assemblers don't even bother to fit the header cables. I have a pile of them in a box that I have collected over the years. They will eventually get turfed out. I see no potential for them and sometimes wonder why I collect these items. I notice that computers are dispensing with the services of the PS2 ports (mouse/keyboard) on a lot of the new motherboards. They are serial ports of a more specialised nature but even they are being replaced by the ubiquitous USB connector.

Laptops have long forsaken serial ports. All they do is take up valuable real estate on the laptop whilst serving no essential purpose. My laptops have plenty of connectivity without either serial or parallel ports. Both have an internal modem fitted (unused) and printers are taken care of with USB ports. Ethernet, firewire and wireless take care of the remainder of my connectivity needs these days.

<begin quote at p. 7>
The third possibility is that Adolf Hitler's grandfather was Jewish. Rumours to that effect circulated in Munich cafes in the early 1920s, and were fostered by sensationalist journalism of the foreign press during the 1930s. It was suggested that the name Huttler was Jewish, 'revealed' that he could be traced to a Jewish family called Hitler in Bucharest, and even claimed that his father had been sired by Baron Rothschild, in whose house in Vienna his grandmother had allegedly spent some time as a servant. But the most serious speculation about Hitler's supposed Jewish background has occurred since the Second World War and is directly traceable to the memoirs of the leading Nazi lawyer and Governor General of Poland, Hans Frank, dictated in his Nuremburg cell while awaiting the hangman...

Allegedly commissioned by Hitler to look into his family history, Frank reportedly discovered that Maria Anna Shicklgruber had given birth to her child while serving as a cook in the home of a Jewish family called Grankenberger in Graz...

Frank's story gained wide circulation in the 1950s. But it simply does not stand up. There was no Jewish family called Frankenberger in Graz during the 1880s. In fact, there were no Jews at all in the whole of Styria at that time, since Jews were not permitted in that part of Austria until the 1860s. A family named Frankenreiter did live there, but was not Jewish . . . Hans Frank's memoirs, dictated at a time of when he was waiting for the hangman and plainly undergoing a psychological crisis, are full of inaccuracies and have to be used with caution. With regard to the story of Hitler's grandfather, whoever he was, he was not a Jew from Graz.

The only serious contenders for the paternity of Hitler's father remain, therefore, Johann Georg Hiedler and Johann Nepomuk Hiedler (or Huttler).

If I were you, I'd keep the R8 and put some thought into upgrading your antenna. We can pick nits about which receiver is best, about which one will let you ID 1000 instead of 999 DX stations; but the antenna is where the action is.

It's worth a look. I have a contemporary MB that still has the DB9 serial connector. Next to the floppy disk connector. Ha!

If anything, I'd consider getting a tune-up on the R8.

The R8 is my main 'workhorse' radio here though I also have the R7, R8A and R8B at my disposal.

As already mentioned, check your antenna situation as well.

Specify ANY place in the United States where a couple can be lawfully married in a church WITHOUT having a marriage license. AND be accorded all of the benefits to married couples that the state provides. THEN we can discuss this.

Dollar Tree? Cool Hand Luke movie was filmed not far from Stockton.

There is a Dollar Tree store in that strip mall next to the Walmart store, that is a mile and a half South of doggy's couch.That Walmart store is where I do my food shopping.

I have to get out and about tomorrow morning anyway, Ergo my old house has PEX plastic water pipes and the outside water faucet has done sprung a pinhole water leak.To repair that water leak, I could call a plumber, but I like to do things myself, so that means I am going buy a crimping tool (about $100.00 more or less, but a plumber would charge me about that much or more to come out here and fix that water leak for me anyway) and some copper rings and a Go - No Go gauge.If I get any more PEX water leaks, I can allways fix them myself.

While I am out and about (He says, Where is Elmo? She says, He is out and about) tomorrow, I might stop off at that Dollar Tree store.

Here is a quote from a very pro-Jewish book that was first published in 1925. The book is "Stranger than Fiction" by Lewis Browne.

"The Jews had become the money lenders of Europe for quite evident reasons. The Church sternly forbade all Christians to engage in the pursuit...
"So the Jews became the money lenders of Europe. They developed a great shrewdness and cunning in the one and only field of opportunity left open to them. And with their shrewdness and cunning they developed a certain cruelty and greed. That was natural. The world was cruel to them, so when the chance was theirs, they were cruel in return..."

National Socialist Germany was not different from other countries in regard to free speech laws. The only difference was the right was in power instead of the left. Before Hitler was in power he had a lot of his papers banned. Hitler said:

"You talk about persecution!" (to an address by the Social Democratic speaker) "I think that there are only a few of us [in our party] here who did not have to suffer persecutions in prison from your side ... You seem to have totally forgotten that for years our shirts were ripped off our backs because you did not like the color . . . In those days, our newspapers were banned and banned and again banned, our meetings were forbidden, and we were forbidden to speak, I was forbidden to speak, for years on. And now you say that criticism is salutary!"
Even today most countries do not have free speech. In leftist Germany today people get arrested for doubting the holo story and other things. People in Britain get arrested for politically incorrect speech or writing. Saying that the races are not all equal in intelligence is against the law there.

The United States has the most free speech but even here it has banned things. At one time the play "Merchant of Venice" was banned in New York because it offended the Jews. People in America were arrested for their beliefs during WWII. All countries did that.

But the United States does have the most free speech and this was a great idea. Hitler also had a great idea of removing the Jews from controlling the media. If we could combine these two ideas we could have a winning combination. Allowing free speech is not the same as allowing one unelected group to virtually control all of the media. The media is the real power, and a minor post such as President of the United States is like nothing by comparison. Why are we voting for President and not voting for who will control the media? When it comes to owning TV stations it is only money that talks, not morality or virtue.

In the Jews country, which Americans are giving billions of dollars to, they don't allow non-Jews to own certain media.

National Socialism was mainly about things like making Germany for the Germans, and rejecting both Communism and Capitalism. But Free Speech is also a great idea. National Socialists today should make it clear that Free Speech is sacred and that no party should be allowed to change that.

When Congress, in December 1961, published its seminal investigation of communist fronts, titled "Guide to Subversive Organizations and Publications," a product of research dating to the founding of the American Communist Party in Chicago in 1919, the most popular index listing started with the word "Progressive." It was progressive groups that were misled, used, abused, and infiltrated more than any other.

How long has this continued? All the way to the 2008 election.

Consider the group Progressives for Obama, formed during Obama's presidential bid. It was loaded with and even founded by some hardcore communists from the 1960s. Consider merely two of them: Tom Hayden, one of the group's four founders, and Mark Rudd, one of the 94 original signers. Hayden and Rudd had been leaders of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), which subverted the policies and plans of Democratic presidents ranging from Vietnam to the 1968 convention. In 2008, both Hayden and Rudd suddenly reemerged as "Progressives for Obama."

Rudd’s take on how Obama won the 2008 election is shrewd -- and dead on.

Mr. Black,

The same can be said for all the new High MPG Cars and Hybrid Cars : The Energy used to Build the One 'New' Car and All of it's Parts could Fuel a currently existing Car for 3+ Years by some estimates.
-so- Keeping the Old Clunker has an overall Energy Use Avoidance in the First Year that extends out 3+ Years -and- Keeping the Old Clunker for 3+ Years can Reduce the Carbon Footprint for a Decade.

do you think they would advertise what they really are? how far do you think they would get if they said they were fascist outright? how many dummies still think hitler or pinochet were some sort saviors.
if they came right out and said here is our real beliefs, let us run your country, what would the average person do? embrace mad men who will murder millions to benefit a few, or we will rape you economy so that the benefits will go to the few. you would run from them in horror.

Milton Friedman and the Economics of Empire
The Road from Serfdom
By GREG GRANDIN
Milton Friedman had no idea that his six-day trip to Chile in March 1975 would generate so much controversy. He was invited to Santiago by a group of Chilean economists who over the previous decades had been educated at the University of Chicago, in a program set up by Friedman's colleague, Arnold Harberger. Two years after the overthrow of Allende, with the dictatorship unable to get inflation under control, the "Chicago Boys" began to gain real influence in General Augusto Pinochet's military government. They recommended the application of what Friedman had already taken to call "shock treatment" or a "shock program" immediately halting the printing of money to finance the budget deficit, cutting state spending twenty to twenty-five percent, laying off tens of thousands of government workers, ending wage and price controls, privatizing state industries, and deregulating capital markets. "Complete free trade," Friedman advised.
Friedman and Harberger were flown down to "help to sell" the plan to the military junta, which despite its zealous defense of the abstraction of free enterprise was partial to corporatism and the maintenance of a large state sector. Friedman gave a series of lectures and met with Pinochet for 45 minutes, where the general "indicated very little indeed about his own or the government's feeling." Although he noted that the dictator, responsible for the torture of tens of thousands of Chileans, seemed "sympathetically attracted to the idea of a shock treatment." Friedman returned home to a firestorm of protest, aggravated by his celebrity as a Newsweek columnist and ongoing revelations about Washington's and corporate America's involvement in the overthrow of Allende. Not only had Nixon, the CIA, and ITT, along with other companies, plotted to destabilize Allende's "democratic road to socialism," but now a renowned University of Chicago economist, whose promotion of the wonders of the free market was heavily subsidized by corporations such as Bechtel, Pepsico, Getty, Pfizer, General Motors, W.R. Grace, and Firestone, was advising the dictator who overthrew him on how to complete the counterrevolution at the cost of skyrocketing unemployment among Chile's poor. The New York Times identified Friedman as the "guiding light of the junta's economic policy," while columnist Anthony Lewis asked: if "pure Chicago economic theory can be carried out in Chile only at the price of repression, should its authors feel some responsibility?" At his university, the Spartacus Youth League pledged to "drive Friedman off campus through protest and exposure," while the student government, replicating their own version of the Church Commission hearings that was just then investigating US crimes in Chile, convened a "Commission of Inquiry on the Friedman/Harberger Issue." Everywhere in the press the name Friedman was paired with the adjectives "draconian" and "shock," with small but persistent protests dogging the professor at many of his public appearances.

In letters to various editors and detractors, Friedman downplayed the extent of his involvement in Chile, fingering Harberger as more directly involved in the mentoring of Chilean economists. While defensive, he nevertheless reveled in the controversy and the frisson of being ushered into speaking engagements via kitchens and back doors to avoid demonstrators. He enjoyed exposing the double standard of "liberal McCarthyism," pointing out that he was never criticized for giving similar advice to Red China, the Soviet Union or Yugoslavia. In recounting an episode when a man was dragged out of the Nobel award ceremony after shouting "down with capitalism, freedom for Chile," Friedman delighted in noting that the protest backfired, resulting in his receiving "twice as long an ovation" than any other laureate.

Friedman defended his relationship with Pinochet by saying that if Allende had been allowed to remain in office Chileans would have suffered "the elimination of thousands and perhaps mass starvation . . . torture and unjust imprisonment." But the elimination of thousands, mass hunger, torture and unjust imprisonment were what was taking place in Chile exactly at the moment the Chicago economist was defending his protégé. Allende's downfall came because he refused to betray Chile's long democratic tradition and invoke martial law, yet Friedman nevertheless insisted that the military junta offered "more room for individual initiative and for a private sphere of life" and thus a greater "chance of a return to a democratic society." It was pure boilerplate, but it did give Friedman a chance to rehearse his understanding of the relationship between capitalism and freedom.

Critics of both Pinochet and Friedman took Chile as proof positive that the kind of free-market absolutism advocated by the Chicago School was only possible through repression. So Friedman countered by redefining the meaning of freedom. Contrary to the prevailing post-WWII belief that political liberty was dependent on some form of mild social leveling, he insisted that "economic freedom is an essential requisite for political freedom." More than his monetarist theorems, this equation of "capitalism and freedom" was his greatest contribution to the rehabilitation of conservatism in the 1970s. Where pre-New Deal conservatives positioned themselves in defense of social hierarchy, privilege, and order, post-WWII conservatives instead celebrated the free market as a venue of creativity and liberty. Such a formulation today stands at the heart of the conservative movement, having been accepted as commonsense by mainline politicians and opinion makers. It is likewise enshrined in Bush's National Security Strategy, which mentions "economic freedom" more than twice as many times as it does "political freedom."

While he was in Chile Friedman gave a speech titled "The Fragility of Freedom" where he described the "role in the destruction of a free society that was played by the emergence of the welfare state." Chile's present difficulties, he argued, "were due almost entirely to the forty-year trend toward collectivism, socialism and the welfare state . . . a course that would lead to coercion rather than freedom." The Pinochet regime, he argued, represented a turning point in a protracted campaign, a tearing off of democracy's false husks to reach true freedom's inner core. "The problem is not of recent origin," Friedman wrote in a follow-up letter to Pinochet, but "arises from trends toward socialism that started forty years ago, and reached their logical and terrible climax in the Allende regime." He praised the general for putting Chile back on the "right track" with the "many measures you have already taken to reverse this trend."

Friedman understood the struggle to be a long one, and indeed some of the first recruits for the battle of Chile were conscripted decades earlier. With financial funding from the US government's Point Four foreign aid program and the Rockefeller Foundation, the University of Chicago's Department of Economics set up scholarship programs in the mid-1950s with Chile's Catholic and public universities. About one hundred select students between 1957 and 1970 received close, hands-on training, first in an apprenticeship program in Chile and then in post-graduate work in Chicago. In principle, Friedman and his colleagues opposed the kind of developmental largesse that funded the exchange program as a market distortion, yet they took the cash to finance their department's graduate program. But they also had a more idealistic purpose.

Starting in the 1950s, Latin America, particularly the southern cone countries of Argentina, Chile, and Brazil, had become a laboratory for developmentalist economics. Social scientists, such as the Argentine Raúl Prebisch from his position as head of the UN's Economic Commission on Latin America, expanded Keynesianism after John Maynard Keynes, who elaborated the dominant post-WWII economic framework that envisioned an active role for the state in the workings of the market -- beyond its focus on managing countervailing cycles of inflation and unemployment to question the terms of international trade. Chronic inflation, according to Prebisch and other Latin American economists, was understood not to be a reflex of any given country's irresponsible monetary system but a symptom of deep structural inequalities that divided the global economy between the developed and the undeveloped world. Volatile commodity prices and capital investment reinforced first world advantage and third world disadvantage. Economists and politicians from across the political spectrum accepted the need for state planning, regulation, and intervention. Such ideas not only drove the economic policies of developing nations, but echoed throughout the corridors and conference rooms of the UN and the World Bank, as well as in the non-aligned movement's 1973 call for a New International Economic Order.

It was the Chicago School's vision of hell, the New Deal writ large across the world stage. These ideas "fell like a bomb" on those who had long stood against Keynesianism at home only now to see its authority spread globally. The Chilean scholarship program was intended to counter such a vision. "University of Chile economists have been followers of Keynes and Prebisch more than of Marx," wrote former University of Chicago president and State Department director of overseas education programs William Benton, and "the Chicago influence" will "introduce a third basic viewpoint, that of contemporary 'market economics.'"

Students returned to Chile not just with a well-rounded education in classical economics but with a burning dedication to carry the faith to benighted lands. They purged the economics departments of their universities of developmentalists and began to set up free-market institutes and think tanks the Center for Social and Economic Studies, for example, and the Foundation for Liberty and Development funded, as their counterparts in the US were, by corporate money. They understood their mission in continental terms, committed, as Chicago alum Ernesto Fontaine put it, "to expand throughout Latin America, confronting the ideological positions which prevented freedom and perpetuated poverty and backwardness."

The program, which brought up students from universities in Argentina as well, is an example of the erratic nature of both public and private US diplomacy, conforming as it does to competing power interests within American society. At the same time that Kennedy was promoting Alliance for Progress reform capitalism, he was training and funding the men and institutions that would constitute the continent's dense network of death squads. At the same time that Chase Manhattan, Chemical, Manufacturers Hanover, and Morgan Guaranty were promoting, through the establishment of the Trilateral Commission, a more conciliatory economic policy in the third world, they were cutting off credit to Chile, making, in accordance with Nixon's directive, its economy "scream." And at the same time that every American president from Truman to Nixon was embracing Keynesianism, the University of Chicago's Economics Department, with financial support from the US government, had turned itself into free-market madrassa that indoctrinated a generation of Latin American economists to spearhead an international capitalist insurgency.

Throughout the turbulent 1960s and 1970s, though, the revolution seemed to be forever deferred. In the late 1960s, the Chicago Boys had drawn up the platform of Allende's nationalist opponent in the 1970 election, which included many of the proposals that eventually would be implemented under Pinochet. But Allende won, so Chile had to wait.

In the meantime, the military junta in Brazil, which took power in 1964, had invited Friedman in 1973 down for advice, which it took for awhile. A severe recession and skyrocketing unemployment followed. Friedman pronounced this first application of "shock therapy" an "economic miracle." But the generals, wisely it seems, demurred, returning to its state-directed program of industrialization that, while failing to curb inflation, did lower unemployment and lay the foundations for Brazil's current economic dominance of Latin America. Richard Nixon too, early in his first term, showed promise, but then he raised tariffs, introduced wage and price controls and, with an eye to the 1972 election, declared himself a Keynesian and opened up the money spout. Nixon was an "enormous disappointment," reflected Friedman.

That left Pinochet, not the most reputable of characters but willing to go the distance. Chile became, according to Business Week, a "laboratory experiment" for taming inflation through monetary control, carrying out, said Barrons, the "most important modifications implemented in the developing world in recent times." American economists may have been writing "treatises" on the "way the world should work, but it is another country that is putting it into effect."

A month after Friedman's visit, the Chilean junta announced that inflation would be stopped "at any cost." The regime cut government spending twenty-seven percent, practically shuttered the national mint, and set fire to bundles of escudos. The state divested from the banking system and deregulated finance, including interest rates. It slashed import tariffs, freed prices on over 2000 products, and removed restrictions against foreign investments. Pinochet pulled Chile out of a number of alliances with neighboring countries intended to promote regional industrialization, turning his country into a gateway for the introduction of cheap goods into Latin America. Tens of thousands of public workers lost their jobs as the government auctioned off, in what amounted to a spectacular transfer of wealth to the private sector, over four hundred state industries. Multinationals were not only granted the right to repatriate one hundred percent of their profits, but were given guaranteed exchange rates to help them do so. In order to build investor confidence, the escudo was fixed to the dollar. Within four years, nearly thirty percent of all property expropriated not just under Allende but under a previous Alliance for Progress land reform was returned to previous owners. New laws treated labor like any other "free" commodity, sweeping away four decades of progressive union legislation. Health care was privatized, as was the public pension fund.

GNP plummeted thirteen percent, industrial production fell 28 percent, and purchasing power collapsed to forty percent of its 1970 level. One national business after another went bankrupt. Unemployment soared. Yet by 1978 the economy rebounded, expanding thirty-two percent between 1978 and 1981. Though salary levels remained close to twenty percent below what they were a decade previously, per capita income began to climb again. Perhaps even a better indicator of progress, torture and extrajudicial executions began to taper off. With hindsight, however, it is now clear that the Chicago economists, despite the credit they received for three years of economic growth, had set Chile on the road to near collapse. The rebound of the economy was a function of the liberalization of the financial system and massive foreign investment. That investment, it turns out, led to a speculative binge, monopolization of the banking system, and heavy borrowing. The deluge of foreign capital did allow the fixed exchange rate to be maintained for a short period. But sharp increases in private debt rising from $2 billion in 1978 to over $14 billion in 1982 -- put unsustainable pressure on Chile's currency. Pegged as it was to the appreciating US dollar, the value of the escudo was kept artificially high, leading to a flood of cheap imports. While consumers took advantage of liberalized credit to purchase TVs, cars, and other high-ticket items, savings shrank, debt increased, exports fell, and the trade deficit ballooned.

In 1982 things fell apart. Copper prices plummeted, accelerating Chile's balance of trade deficit. GDP plunged fifteen percent, while industrial production rapidly contracted. Bankruptcies tripled and unemployment hit 30 percent. Despite his pledge to hold firm, Pinochet devalued the escudo, devastating poor Chileans who had either availed themselves to liberalized credit to borrow in dollars or who held their savings in escudos. The Central Bank lost forty-five percent of its reserves, while the private banking system collapsed. The crisis forced the state, dusting off laws still on the books from the Allende period, to take over nearly seventy percent of the banking system and reimpose controls on finance, industry, prices and wages. Turning to the IMF for a bailout, Pinochet extended a public guarantee to repay foreign creditors and banks.

But before the crisis of 1982, there were the golden years between 1978 and 1981. Just as the international left flocked to Chile during the Allende period, under Pinochet the country became a mecca for the free-market right. Economists, political scientists, and journalists came to witness the "miracle" first hand, holding up Chile as a model to be implemented throughout the world. Representatives from European and American banks poured into Santiago, paying tribute to Pinochet by restoring credit that was denied the heretic Allende. The World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank extolled Chile as a paragon of responsibility, advancing it 46 loans between 1976 and 1986 for over $3.1 billion.

In addition to money men, right-wing activists traveled to Chile in a show of solidarity with the Pinochet regime. Publisher of the National Review William Rusher, along with other cadres who eventually coalesced around Reagan's 1976 and 1980 bids for the Republican nomination, organized the American-Chilean Council, a solidarity committee to counter critical press coverage in the US of Pinochet. "I was unable to find a single opponent of the regime in Chile," Rusher wrote after a 1978 pilgrimage, "who believes the Chilean government engages" in torture. As to the "interim human discomfort" caused by radical free-market policies, Rusher believed that "a certain amount of deprivation today, in the interest of a far healthier society tomorrow, is neither unendurable nor necessarily reprehensible."

Friedrich von Hayek, the Austrian émigré and University of Chicago professor whose 1944 Road to Serfdom dared to suggest that state planning would produce not "freedom and prosperity" but "bondage and misery," visited Pinochet's Chile a number of times. He was so impressed that he held a meeting of his famed Société Mont Pélérin there. He even recommended Chile to Thatcher as a model to complete her free-market revolution. The Prime Minister, at the nadir of Chile's 1982 financial collapse, agreed that Chile represented a "remarkable success" but believed that Britain's "democratic institutions and the need for a high degree of consent" make "some of the measures" taken by Pinochet "quite unacceptable."
Like Friedman, Hayek glimpsed in Pinochet the avatar of true freedom, who would rule as a dictator only for a "transitional period," only as long as needed to reverse decades of state regulation. "My personal preference," he told a Chilean interviewer, "leans toward a liberal dictatorship rather than toward a democratic government devoid of liberalism." In a letter to the London Times he defended the junta, reporting that he had "not been able to find a single person even in much maligned Chile who did not agree that personal freedom was much greater under Pinochet than it had been under Allende." Of course, the thousands executed and tens of thousands tortured by Pinochet's regime weren't talking.
Hayek's University of Chicago colleague Milton Friedman got the grief, but it was Hayek who served as the true inspiration for Chile's capitalist crusaders. It was Hayek who depicted Allende's regime as a way station between Chile's postwar welfare state and a hypothetical totalitarian future. Accordingly, the Junta justified its terror as needed not only to prevent Chile from turning into a Stalinist gulag but to sweep away fifty years of tariffs, subsidies, capital controls, labor legislation, and social welfare provisions -- a "half century of errors," according to finance minister Sergio De Castro, that was leading Chile down its own road to serfdom.
"To us, it was a revolution," said government economist Miguel Kast, an Opus Dei member and follower of both Hayek and American Enterprise Institute theologian Michael Novak. The Chicago economists had set out to affect, radically and immediately, a "foundational" conversion of Chilean society, to obliterate its "pseudo-democracy" (prior to 1973, Chile enjoyed one of the most durable constitutional democracies in the Americas).
Where Friedman made allusions to the superiority of economic freedom over political freedom in his defense of Pinochet, the Chicago group institutionalized such a hierarchy in a 1980 constitution named after Hayek's 1960 treatise The Constitution of Liberty. The new charter enshrined economic liberty and political authoritarianism as complementary qualities. They justified the need of a strong executive such as Pinochet not only to bring about a profound transformation of society but to maintain it until there was a "change in Chilean mentality." Chileans had long been "educated in weakness," said the president of the Central Bank, and a strong hand was needed in order to "educate them in strength." The market itself would provide tutoring: When asked about the social consequences of the high bankruptcy rate that resulted from the shock therapy, Admiral José Toribio Merino replied that "such is the jungle of . . . economic life. A jungle of savage beasts, where he who can kill the one next to him, kills him. That is reality." But before such a savage nirvana of pure competition and risk could be attained, a dictatorship was needed to force Chileans to accept the values of consumerism, individualism, and passive rather than participatory democracy. "Democracy is not an end in itself," said Pinochet in a 1979 speech written by two of Friedman's disciples, but a conduit to a truly "free society" that protected absolute economic freedom. Friedman hedged on the relationship between capitalism and dictatorship, but his former students were consistent: "A person's actual freedom," said Finance Minister de Castro, "can only be ensured through an authoritarian regime that exercises power by implementing equal rules for everyone." "Public opinion," he admitted, "was very much against [us], so we needed a strong personality to maintain the policy."

Jeane Kirkpatrick was among those who traveled to Chile to pay respect to the pioneer, lauding Pinochet for his economic initiatives. "The Chilean economy is a great success," the ambassador said, "everyone knows it, or they should know it." She was dispatched by Reagan shortly after his 1981 inauguration to "normalize completely [Washington's] relations with Chile in order to work together in a pleasant way," including the removal of economic and arms sanctions and the revocation of Carter's "discriminatory" human rights policy. Such pleasantries, though, didn't include meeting with the relatives of the disappeared, commenting on the recent deportation of leading opposition figures, or holding Pinochet responsible for the 1976 car bomb execution of Orlando Letelier, Allende's ambassador to the US, in Washington's Dupont Circle -- all issues Kirkpatrick insisted would be resolved with "quiet diplomacy."

Setting aside the struggles surrounding religion, race, and sexuality that give American politics its unique edge, it was in Chile where the New Right first executed its agenda of defining democracy in terms of economic freedom and restoring the power of the executive branch. Under Pinochet's firm hand, the country, according to prominent Chicago graduate Cristián Larroulet, became a "pioneer in the world trend toward forms of government based on a free social order." Its privatized pension system, for example, is today held up as a model for the transformation of Social Security, with Bush having received advice from Chilean economist José Piñera, also a Chicago student, on how to do so in 1997. Pinochet "felt he was making history," said Piñera, "he wanted to be ahead of both Reagan and Thatcher." Friedman too saw himself in the vanguard. "In every generation," he is quoted in his flattering New York Times obituary, which spares just a sentence on his role in Chile, "there's got to be somebody who goes the whole way, and that's why I believe as I do."

And trailblazer both men were, harbinger of a brave and merciless new world. But if Pinochet's revolution was to spread throughout Latin America and elsewhere, it first had to take hold in the United States. And even as the dictator was "torturing people so prices could be free," as Uruguayan writer Eduardo Galeano once mordantly observed, the insurgency that would come to unite behind Ronald Reagan was gathering steam.
Today, Pinochet is under house arrest for his brand of "shock therapy," and Friedman is dead. But the world they helped usher in survives, in increasingly grotesque form. What was considered extreme in Chile in 1975 has now become the norm in the US today: a society where the market defines the totality of human fulfillment, and a government that tortures in the name of freedom.

Tinker Bell, Pinochet and The Fairy Tale Miracle of Chile
Published December 10th, 2006 in Articles
Chile’s former military ruler General Augusto Pinochet has died at the age of 91 - a week after entering hospital in Santiago to receive treatment for a heart attack.
En español
Cinderella’s Fairy Godmother, Tinker Bell and General Augusto Pinochet had much in common.
All three performed magical good deeds. In the case of Pinochet, he was universally credited with the Miracle of Chile, the wildly successful experiment in free markets, privatization, de-regulation and union-free economic expansion whose laissez-faire seeds spread from Valparaiso to Virginia.
But Cinderella’s pumpkin did not really turn into a coach. The Miracle of Chile, too, was just another fairy tale. The claim that General Pinochet begat an economic powerhouse was one of those utterances whose truth rested entirely on its repetition.
Chile could boast some economic success. But that was the work of Salvador Allende - who saved his nation, miraculously, a decade after his death.
In 1973, the year General Pinochet brutally seized the government, Chile’s unemployment rate was 4.3%. In 1983, after ten years of free-market modernization, unemployment reached 22%. Real wages declined by 40% under military rule.
In 1970, 20% of Chile’s population lived in poverty. By 1990, the year “President” Pinochet left office, the number of destitute had doubled to 40%. Quite a miracle.

Pinochet did not destroy Chile's economy all alone. It took nine years of hard work by the most brilliant minds in world academia, a gaggle of Milton Friedman's trainees, the Chicago Boys. Under the spell of their theories, the General abolished the minimum wage, outlawed trade union bargaining rights, privatized the pension system, abolished all taxes on wealth and on business profits, slashed public employment, privatized 212 state industries and 66 banks and ran a fiscal surplus. Freed of the dead hand of bureaucracy, taxes and union rules, the country took a giant leap forward … into bankruptcy and depression. After nine years of economics Chicago style, Chile's industry keeled over and died. In 1982 and 1983, GDP dropped 19%. The free-market experiment was kaput, the test tubes shattered. Blood and glass littered the laboratory floor. Yet, with remarkable chutzpah, the mad scientists of Chicago declared success. In the US, President Ronald Reagan's State Department issued a report concluding, "Chile is a casebook study in sound economic management." Milton Friedman himself coined the phrase, "The Miracle of Chile." Friedman's sidekick, economist Art Laffer, preened that Pinochet's Chile was, "a showcase of what supply-side economics can do."

It certainly was. More exactly, Chile was a showcase of de-regulation gone berserk.

The Chicago Boys persuaded the junta that removing restrictions on the nation's banks would free them to attract foreign capital to fund industrial expansion.

Pinochet sold off the state banks - at a 40% discount from book value - and they quickly fell into the hands of two conglomerate empires controlled by speculators Javier Vial and Manuel Cruzat. From their captive banks, Vial and Cruzat siphoned cash to buy up manufacturers - then leveraged these assets with loans from foreign investors panting to get their piece of the state giveaways.

The bank's reserves filled with hollow securities from connected enterprises. Pinochet let the good times roll for the speculators. He was persuaded that Governments should not hinder the logic of the market.

By 1982, the pyramid finance game was up. The Vial and Cruzat "Grupos" defaulted. Industry shut down, private pensions were worthless, the currency swooned. Riots and strikes by a population too hungry and desperate to fear bullets forced Pinochet to reverse course. He booted his beloved Chicago experimentalists. Reluctantly, the General restored the minimum wage and unions' collective bargaining rights. Pinochet, who had previously decimated government ranks, authorized a program to create 500,000 jobs. In other words, Chile was pulled from depression by dull old Keynesian remedies, all Franklin Roosevelt, zero Reagan/Thatcher. New Deal tactics rescued Chile from the Panic of 1983, but the nation's long-term recovery and growth since then is the result of - cover the children's ears - a large dose of socialism.

To save the nation's pension system, Pinochet nationalized banks and industry on a scale unimagined by Socialist Allende. The General expropriated at will, offering little or no compensation. While most of these businesses were eventually re-privatized, the state retained ownership of one industry: copper.

For nearly a century, copper has meant Chile and Chile copper. University of Montana metals expert Dr. Janet Finn notes, “It’s absurd to describe a nation as a miracle of free enterprise when the engine of the economy remains in government hands.” Copper has provided 30% to 70% of the nation’s export earnings. This is the hard currency which has built today’s Chile, the proceeds from the mines seized from Anaconda and Kennecott in 1973 - Allende’s posthumous gift to his nation.
Agribusiness is the second locomotive of Chile’s economic growth. This also is a legacy of the Allende years. According to Professor Arturo Valenzuela of Georgetown University, Washington DC, Allende’s land reform, the break-up of feudal estates (which Pinochet could not fully reverse), created a new class of productive tiller-owners, along with corporate and cooperative operators, who now bring in a stream of export earnings to rival copper. “In order to have an economic miracle,” says Dr. Valenzuela, “maybe you need a socialist government first to commit agrarian reform.”
So there we have it. Keynes and Marx, not Friedman, saved Chile.
But the myth of the free-market Miracle persists because it serves a quasi-religious function. Within the faith of the Reaganauts and Thatcherites, Chile provides the necessary genesis fable, the ersatz Eden from which laissez-faire dogma sprang successful and shining.
In 1998, the international finance Gang of Four - the World Bank, the IMF, the Inter-American Development Bank and the International Bank for Settlements - offered a $41.5 billion line of credit to Brazil.
But before the agencies handed the drowning nation a life preserver, they demanded Brazil commit to swallow the economic medicine that nearly killed Chile. You know the list: fire-sale privatizations, flexible labor markets (i.e. union demolition) and deficit reduction through savage cuts in government services and social security.
In Sao Paulo, the public was assured these cruel measures would ultimately benefit the average Brazilian. What looked like financial colonialism was sold as the cure-all tested in Chile with miraculous results.
But that miracle was in fact a hoax, a fraud, a fairy tale in which everyone did not live happily ever after.

Don't forget the blackmailing of the states to make them raise the drinking age to 21, along with various other laws the feds passed and then told the states "if you don't comply, you won't receive (highway funds, omnibus crime bill money, ad inf.).

Leon Degrelle

"We have the power. Now our gigantic work begins."
Those were Hitler's words on the night of January 30, 1933, as cheering crowds surged past him, for five long hours, beneath the windows of the Chancellery in Berlin.

His political struggle had lasted 14 years. He himself was 43, that is, physically and intellectually at the peak of his powers. He had won over millions of Germans and organized them into Germany's largest and most dynamic political party, a party girded by a human rampart of hundreds of thousands of storm troopers, three fourths of them members of the working class. He had been extremely shrewd. All but toying with his adversaries, Hitler had, one after another, vanquished them all.

Standing there at the window, his arm raised to the delirious throng, he must have known a feeling of triumph. But he seemed almost torpid, absorbed, as if lost in another world.

It was a world far removed from the delirium in the street, a world of 65 million citizens who loved him or hated him, but all of whom, from that night on, had become his responsibility. And as he knew-as almost all Germans knew on January 1933 -- that this was a crushing, an almost desperate responsibility.

Half a century later, few people understand the crisis Germany faced at that time. Today, it's easy to assume that Germans have always been well-fed and even plump. But the Germans Hitler inherited were virtual skeletons.

During the preceding years, a score of "democratic" governments had come and gone, often in utter confusion. Instead of alleviating the people's misery, they had increased it, due to their own instability: it was impossible for them to pursue any given plan for more than a year or two. Germany had arrived at a dead end. In just a few years there had been 224,000 suicides - a horrifying figure, bespeaking a state of misery even more horrifying.

By the beginning of 1933, the misery of the German people was virtually universal. At least six million unemployed and hungry workers roamed aimlessly through the streets, receiving a pitiful unemployment benefit of less than 42 marks per month. Many of those out of work had families to feed, so that altogether some 20 million Germans, a third of the country's population, were reduced to trying to survive on about 40 pfennigs per person per day.

Unemployment benefits, moreover, were limited to a period of six months. After that came only the meager misery allowance dispensed by the welfare offices.

Notwithstanding the gross inadequacy of this assistance, by trying to save the six million unemployed from total destruction, even for just six months, both the state and local branches of the German government saw themselves brought to ruin: in 1932 alone such aid had swallowed up four billion marks, 57 percent of the total tax revenues of the federal government and the regional states. A good many German municipalities were bankrupt.

Those still lucky enough to have some kind of job were not much better off. Workers and employees had taken a cut of 25 percent in their wages and salaries. Twenty-one percent of them were earning between 100 and 250 marks per month; 69.2 percent of them, in January of 1933, were being paid less than 1,200 marks annually. No more than about 100,000 Germans, it was estimated, were able to live without financial worries.

During the three years before Hitler came to power, total earnings had fallen by more than half, from 23 billion marks to 11 billion. The average per capita income had dropped from 1,187 marks in 1929 to 627 marks, a scarcely tolerable level, in 1932. By January 1933, when Hitler took office, 90 percent of the German people were destitute. No one escaped the strangling effects of the unemployment. The intellectuals were hit as hard as the working class. Of the 135,000 university graduates, 60 percent were without jobs. Only a tiny minority was receiving unemployment benefits.

"The others," wrote one foreign observer, Marcel Laloire (in his book New Germany), "are dependent on their parents or are sleeping in flophouses. In the daytime they can be seen on the boulevards of Berlin wearing signs on their backs to the effect that they will accept any kind of work."

But there was no longer any kind of work.
The same drastic fall-off had hit Germany's cottage industry, which comprised some four million workers. Its turnover had declined 55 percent, with total sales plunging from 22 billion to 10 billion marks.

Hardest hit of all were construction workers; 90 percent of them were unemployed.

Farmers, too, had been ruined, crushed by losses amounting to 12 billion marks. Many had been forced to mortgage their homes and their land. In 1932 just the interest on the loans they had incurred due to the crash was equivalent to 20 percent of the value of the agricultural production of the entire country. Those who were no longer able to meet the interest payments saw their farms auctioned off in legal proceedings: in the years 1931-1932, 17,157 farms-with a combined total area of 462,485 hectares - were liquidated in this way. The "democracy" of Germany's "Weimar Republic" (1918 -1933) had proven utterly ineffective in addressing such flagrant wrongs as this impoverishment of millions of farm workers, even though they were the nation's most stable and hardest working citizens. Plundered, dispossessed, abandoned: small wonder they heeded Hitler's call. Their situation on January 30, 1933, was tragic. Like the rest of Germany's working class, they had been betrayed by their political leaders, reduced to the alternatives of miserable wages, paltry and uncertain benefit payments, or the outright humiliation of begging. Germany's industries, once renowned everywhere in the world, were no longer prosperous, despite the millions of marks in gratuities that the financial magnates felt obliged to pour into the coffers of the parties in power before each election in order to secure their cooperation. For 14 years the well-blinkered conservatives and Christian democrats of the political center had been feeding at the trough just as greedily as their adversaries of the left..

One inevitable consequence of this ever-increasing misery and uncertainty about the future was an abrupt decline in the birthrate. When your household savings are wiped out, and when you fear even greater calamities in the days ahead, you do not risk adding to the number of your dependents.

In those days the birth rate was a reliable barometer of a country's prosperity. A child is a joy, unless you have nothing but a crust of bread to put in its little hand. And that's just the way it was with hundreds of thousands of German families in 1932..

Hitler knew that he would be starting from zero. From less than zero. But he was also confident of his strength of will to create Germany anew-politically, socially, financially, and economically. Now legally and officially in power, he was sure that he could quickly convert that cipher into a Germany more powerful than ever before.
What support did he have?

For one thing, he could count on the absolute support of millions of fanatical disciples. And on that January evening, they joyfully shared in the great thrill of victory. Some thirteen million Germans, many of them former Socialists and Communists, had voted for his party.
But millions of Germans were still his adversaries, disconcerted adversaries, to be sure, whom their own political parties had betrayed, but who had still not been won over to National Socialism. The two sides-those for and those against Hitler-were very nearly equal in numbers. But whereas those on the left were divided among themselves, Hitler's disciples were strongly united. And in one thing above all, the National Socialists had an incomparable advantage: in their convictions and in their total faith in a leader. Their highly organized and well-disciplined party had contented with the worst kind of obstacles, and had overcome them..

In the eyes of the capitalists, money was the sole active element in the flourishing of a country's economy. To Hitler's way of thinking, that conception was radically wrong: capital, on the contrary, was only an instrument. Work was the essential element: man's endeavor, man's honor, blood, muscles and soul.

Hitler wanted not just to put an to the class struggle, but to reestablish the priority of the human being, in justice and respect, as the principal factor in production..

For the worker's trust in the fatherland to be restored, he had to feel that from now on he was to be (and to be treated) as an equal, instead of remaining a social inferior. Under the governments of the so-called democratic parties of both the left and the right, he had remained an inferior; for none of them had understood that in the hierarchy of national values, work is the very essence of life; ..

The objective, then, was far greater than merely getting six million unemployed back to work. It was to achieve a total revolution. "The people," Hitler declared, "were not put here on earth for the sake of the economy, and the economy doesn't exist for the sake of capital. On the contrary, capital is meant to serve the economy, and the economy in turn to serve the people."

It would not be enough merely to reopen the thousands of closed factories and fill them with workers. If the old concepts still ruled, the workers would once again be nothing more than living machines, faceless and interchangeable..

Nowhere in twentieth-century Europe had the authority of a head of state ever been based on such overwhelming and freely given national consent. Prior to Hitler, from 1919 to 1932, those governments piously styling themselves democratic had usually come to power by meager majorities, sometimes as low as 51 or 52 percent.

"I am not a dictator," Hitler had often affirmed, "and I never will be. Democracy will be rigorously enforced by National Socialism." Authority does not mean tyranny. A tyrant is someone who puts himself in power without the will of the people or against the will of the people. A democrat is placed in power by the people. But democracy is not limited to a single formula. It may be partisan or parliamentary. Or it may be authoritarian. The important thing is that the people have wished it, chosen it, established it in its given form.

That was the case with Hitler. He came to power in an essentially democratic way. Whether one likes it or not, this fact is undeniable. And after coming to power, his popular support measurably increased from year to year. The more intelligent and honest of his enemies have been obliged to admit this, men such as the declared anti-Nazi historian and professor Joachim Fest, who wrote:

For Hitler was never interested in establishing a mere tyranny. Sheer greed for power will not suffice as explanation for his personality and energy-He was not born to be a mere tyrant. He was fixated upon his mission of defending Europe and the Aryan race ... Never had he felt so dependent upon the masses as he did at this time, and he watched their reactions with anxious concern.

These lines weren't written by Dr. Goebbels, but by a stern critic of Hitler and his career..

When it came time to vote, Hitler was granted plenary powers with a sweeping majority of 441 votes to 94: he had won not just two thirds, but 82.44 percent of the assembly's votes. This "Enabling Act" granted Hitler for four years virtually absolute authority over the legislative as well as the executive affairs of the government..

After 1945 the explanation that was routinely offered for all this was that the Germans had lost their heads. Whatever the case, it is a historical fact that they acted of their own free will. Far from being resigned, they were enthusiastic. "For the first time since the last days of the monarchy," historian Joachim Fest has conceded, "the majority of the Germans now had the feeling that they could identify with the state."..

"You talk about persecution!" he thundered in an impromptu response to an address by the Social Democratic speaker. "I think that there are only a few of us [in our party] here who did not have to suffer persecutions in prison from your side ... You seem to have totally forgotten that for years our shirts were ripped off our backs because you did not like the color . . . We have outgrown your persecutions!" "In those days," he scathingly continued, "our newspapers were banned and banned and again banned, our meetings were forbidden, and we were forbidden to speak, I was forbidden to speak, for years on. And now you say that criticism is salutary!"..

Hitler's millions of followers had rediscovered the primal strength of rough, uncitified man, of a time when men still had backbone..

Gustav Noske, the lumberjack who became defense minister - and the most valiant defender of the embattled republic in the tumultuous months immediately following the collapse of 1918 - acknowledged honestly in 1944, when the Third Reich was already rapidly breaking down, that the great majority of the German people still remained true to Hitler because of the social renewal he had brought to the working class..

Here again, well before the collapse of party-ridden Weimar Republic, disillusion with the unions had become widespread among the working masses. They were starving. The hundreds of Socialist and Communist deputies stood idly by, impotent to provide any meaningful help to the desperate proletariat.

Their leaders had no proposals to remedy, even partially, the great distress of the people; no plans for large-scale public works, no industrial restructuring, no search for markets abroad.
Moreover, they offered no energetic resistance to the pillaging by foreign countries of the Reich's last financial resources: this a consequence of the Treaty of Versailles that the German Socialists had voted to ratify in June of 1919, and which they had never since had the courage effectively to oppose..

In 1930, 1931 and 1932, German workers had watched the disaster grow: the number of unemployed rose from two million to three, to four, to five, then to six million. At the same time, unemployment benefits fell lower and lower, finally to disappear completely. Everywhere one saw dejection and privation: emaciated mothers, children wasting away in sordid lodgings, and thousands of beggars in long sad lines.
The failure, or incapacity, of the leftist leaders to act, not to mention their insensitivity, had stupefied the working class. Of what use were such leaders with their empty heads and empty hearts-and, often enough, full pockets?

Well before January 30, thousands of workers had already joined up with Hitler's dynamic formations, which were always hard at it where they were most needed. Many joined the National Socialists when they went on strike. Hitler, himself a former worker and a plain man like themselves, was determined to eliminate unemployment root and branch. He wanted not merely to defend the laborer's right to work, but to make his calling one of honor, to insure him respect and to integrate him fully into a living community of all the Germans, who had been divided class against class.

In January 1933, Hitler's victorious troops were already largely proletarian in character, including numerous hardfisted street brawlers, many unemployed, who no longer counted economically or socially.

Meanwhile, membership in the Marxist labor unions had fallen off enormously: among thirteen million socialist and Communist voters in 1932, no more than five million were union members. Indifference and discouragement had reached such levels that many members no longer paid their union dues. Many increasingly dispirited Marxist leaders began to wonder if perhaps the millions of deserters were the ones who saw things clearly. Soon they wouldn't wonder any longer.
Even before Hitler won Reichstag backing for his "Enabling Act," Germany's giant labor union federation, the ADGB, had begun to rally to the National Socialist cause. As historian Joachim Fest acknowledged: "On March 20, the labor federation's executive committee addressed a kind of declaration of loyalty to Hitler." (J. Fest, Hitler, p. 413.)

Hitler than took a bold and clever step. The unions had always clamored to have the First of May recognized as a worker's holiday, but the Weimar Republic had never acceded to their request. Hitler, never missing an opportunity, grasped this one with both hands. He did more than grant this reasonable demand: he proclaimed the First of May a national holiday..

I myself attended the memorable meeting at the Tempelhof field in 1933. By nine o'clock that morning, giant columns, some of workers, others of youth groups, marching in cadence down the pavement of Berlin's great avenues, had started off towards the airfield to which Hitler had called together all Germans. All Germany would follow the rally as it was transmitted nationwide by radio..

In the dark, a group of determined opponents could easily have heckled Hitler or otherwise sabotaged the meeting. Perhaps a third of the onlookers had been Socialists or Communists only three months previously. But not a single hostile voice was raised during the entire ceremony. There was only universal acclamation.
Ceremony is the right word for it. It was an almost magical rite. Hitler and Goebbels had no equals in the arranging of dedicatory ceremonies of this sort. First there were popular songs, then great Wagnerian hymns to grip the audience. Germany has a passion for orchestral music, and Wagner taps the deepest and most secret vein of the German soul, its romanticism, its inborn sense of the powerful and the grand.

Meanwhile the hundreds of flags floated above the rostrum, redeemed from the darkness by arrows of light.

Now Hitler strode to the rostrum. For those standing at the of the field, his face must have appeared vanishingly small, but his words flooded instantaneously across the acres of people in his audience. A Latin audience would have preferred a voice less harsh, more delicately expressive. But there was no doubt that Hitler spoke to the psyche of the German people.

Germans have rarely had the good fortune to experience the enchantment of the spoken word. In Germany, the tone has always been set by ponderous speakers, more fond of elephantine pedantry than oratorical passion. Hitler, as a speaker, was a prodigy, the greatest orator of his century. He possessed, above all, what the ordinary speaker lacks: a mysterious ability to project power.

A bit like a medium or sorcerer, he was seized, even transfixed, as he addressed a crowd. It responded to Hitler's projection of power, radiating it back, establishing, in the course of myriad exchanges, a current that both orator and audience gave to and drew from equally. One had to personally experience him speaking to understand this phenomenon.

This special gift is what lay at the basis of Hitler's ability to win over the masses. His high-voltage, lightning-like projection transported and transformed all who experienced it. Tens of millions were enlightened, riveted and inflamed by the fire of his anger, irony, and passion.

By the time the cheering died away that May first evening, hundreds of thousands of previously indifferent or even hostile workers who had come to Tempelhof at the urging of their labor federation leaders were now won over. They had become followers, like the SA stormtroopers whom so many there that evening had brawled with in recent years.

The great human sea surged back from Tempelhof to Berlin. A million and a half people had arrived in perfect order, and their departure was just as orderly. No bottlenecks halted the cars and busses. For those of us who witnessed it, this rigorous, yet joyful, discipline of a contented people was in itself a source of wonder. Everything about the May Day mass meeting had come off as smoothly clockwork.
The memory of that fabulous crowd thronging back to the center of Berlin will never leave me. A great many were on foot. Their faces were now different faces, as though they had been imbued with a strange and totally new spirit. The non-Germans in the crowd were as if stunned, and no less impressed than Hitler's fellow countrymen.
The French ambassador, Andrï¿½ Franï¿½ois-Poncet, noted:
The foreigners on the speaker's platform as guests of honor were not alone in carrying away the impression of a truly beautiful and wonderful public festival, an impression that was created by the regime's genius for organization, by the night time display of uniforms, by the play of lights, the rhythm of the music, by the flags and the colorful fireworks; and they were not alone in thinking that a breath of reconciliation and unity was passing over the Third Reich. "It is our wish," Hitler had exclaimed, as though taking heaven as his witness, "to get along together and to struggle together as brothers, so that at the hour when we shall come before God, we might say to him: 'See, Lord, we have changed. The German people are no longer a people ashamed, a people mean and cowardly and divided. No, Lord! The German people have become strong in their spirit, in their will, in their perseverance, in their acceptance of any sacrifice. Lord, we remain faithful to Thee! Bless our struggle!" (A. Franï¿½ois-Poncet, Souvenirs d'une ambassade ï¿½ Berlin, p. 128.)

Who else could have made such an incantatory appeal without making himself look ridiculous?

No politician had ever spoken of the rights of workers with such faith and such force, or had laid out in such clear terms the social plan he pledged to carry out on behalf of the common people.

The next day, the newspaper of the proletarian left, the "Union Journal," reported on this mass meeting at which at least two thirds-a million-of those attending were workers. "This May First was victory day," the paper summed up.

With the workers thus won over, what further need was there for the thousands of labor union locals that for so long had poisoned the social life of the Reich and which, in any case, had accomplished nothing of a lasting, positive nature?

Within hours of the conclusion of that "victory" meeting at the Tempelhof field, the National Socialists were able to peacefully take complete control of Germany's entire labor union organization, including all its buildings, enterprises and banks. An era of Marxist obstruction abruptly came to an end : from now on, a single national organization would embody the collective will and interests of all of Germany's workers.

Although he was now well on his way to creating what he pledged would be a true "government of the people," Hitler also realized that great obstacles remained. For one thing, the Communist rulers in Moscow had not dropped their guard-or their guns. Restoring the nation would take more than words and promises, it would take solid achievements. Only then would the enthusiasm shown by the working class at the May First mass meeting be an expression of lasting victory.

How could Hitler solve the great problem that had defied solution by everyone else (both in Germany and abroad): putting millions of unemployed back to work?

What would Hitler do about wages? Working hours? Leisure time? Housing? How would he succeed in winning, at long last, respect for the rights and dignity of the worker?

How could men's lives be improved-materially, morally, and, one might even say, spiritually? How would he proceed to build a new society fit for human beings, free of the inertia, injustices and prejudices of the past?

"National Socialism," Hitler had declared at the outset, "has its mission and its hour; it is not just a passing movement but a phase of history."

The instruments of real power now in his hands-an authoritarian state, its provinces subordinate but nonetheless organic parts of the national whole-Hitler had acted quickly to shake himself free of the last constraints of the impotent sectarian political parties. Moreover, he was now able to direct a cohesive labor force that was no longer split into a thousand rivulets but flowed as a single, mighty current.

Hitler was self-confident, sure of the power of his own conviction. He had no intention, or need, to resort to the use of physical force. Instead, he intended to win over, one by one, the millions of Germans who were still his adversaries, and even those who still hated him. His conquest of Germany had taken years of careful planning and hard work. Similarly, he would now realize his carefully worked out plans for transforming the state and society. This meant not merely changes in administrative or governmental structures, but far-reaching social programs.

He had once vowed: "The hour will come when the 15 million people who now hate us will be solidly behind us and will acclaim with us the new revival we shall create together." Eventually he would succeed in winning over even many of his most refractory skeptics and adversaries.

His army of converts was already forming ranks. In a remarkable tribute, historian Joachim Fest felt obliged to acknowledge unequivocally:

Hitler had moved rapidly from the status of a demagogue to that of a respected statesman. The craving to join the ranks of the victors was spreading like an epidemic, and the shrunken minority of those who resisted the urge were being visibly pushed into isolation-The past was dead. The future, it seemed, belonged to the regime, which had more and more followers, which was being hailed everywhere and suddenly had sound reasons on its side.

And even the prominent leftist writer Kurt Tucholsky, sensing the direction of the inexorable tide that was sweeping Germany, vividly commented: "You don't go railing against the ocean." (J. Fest, Hitler, pp. 415 f.)

"Our power," Hitler was now able to declare, "no longer belongs to any territorial fraction of the Reich, nor to any single class of the nation, but to the people in its totality."

Much still remained to be done, however. So far, Hitler had succeeded in clearing the way of obstacles to his program. Now the time to build had arrived.

So many others had failed to tackle the many daunting problems that were now his responsibility. Above all, the nation demanded a solution to the great problem of unemployment. Could Hitler now succeed where others had so dismally failed?..

Unemployment could be combated and eliminated only by giving industry the financial means to start up anew, to modernize, thus creating millions of new jobs.

The normal rate of consumption would not be restored, let alone increased, unless one first raised the starvation-level allowances that were making purchases of any kind a virtual impossibility. On the contrary, production and sales would have to be restored before the six million unemployed could once again become purchasers.
The great economic depression could be overcome only by restimulating industry, by bringing industry into step with the times, and by promoting the development of new products..

Nearly ten years earlier, while in his prison cell, Hitler had already envisioned a formidable system of national highways. He had also conceived of a small, easily affordable automobile (later known as the "Volkswagen"), and had even suggested its outline. It should have the shape of a June bug, he proposed. Nature itself suggested the car's aerodynamic line.

Until Hitler came to power, a car was the privilege of the rich. It was not financially within the reach of the middle class, much less of the worker. The "Volkswagen," costing one-tenth as much as the standard automobile of earlier years, would eventually become a popular work vehicle and a source of pleasure after work: a way to unwind and get some fresh air, and of discovering, thanks to the new Autobahn highway network, a magnificent country that then, in its totality, was virtually unknown to the German worker.

From the beginning, Hitler wanted this economical new car to be built for the millions. The production works would also become one of Germany's most important industrial centers and employers.
During his imprisonment, Hitler had also drawn up plans for the construction of popular housing developments and majestic public buildings.

Some of Hitler's rough sketches still survive. They include groups of individual worker's houses with their own gardens (which were to be built in the hundreds of thousands), a plan for a covered stadium in Berlin, and a vast congress hall, unlike any other in the world, that would symbolize the grandeur of the National Socialist revolution.
"A building with a monumental dome," historian Werner Maser has explained, "the plan of which he drew while he was writing Mein Kampf, would have a span of 46 meters, a height of 220 meters, a diameter of 250 meters, and a capacity of 150 to 190 thousand people standing. The interior of the building would have been 17 times larger than Saint Peter's Cathedral in Rome." (W. Maser, Hitler, Adolf, p. 100.)

"That hall," architect Albert Speer has pointed out, "was not just an idle dream impossible of achievement."

Hitler's imagination, therefore, had long been teeming with a number of ambitious projects, many of which would eventually be realized. Fortunately, the needed entrepreneurs, managers and technicians were on hand. Hitler would not have to improvise.

Historian Werner Maser, although quite anti-Hitler-like nearly all of his colleagues (how else would they have found publishers?) - has acknowledged: "From the beginning of his political career, he [Hitler] took great pains systematically to arrange for whatever he was going to need in order to carry out his plans."

"Hitler was distinguished," Maser has also noted, "by an exceptional intelligence in technical matters." Hitler had acquired his knowledge by devoting many thousands of hours to technical studies from the time of his youth.

"Hitler read an endless number of books," explained Dr. Schacht. "He acquired a very considerable amount of knowledge and made masterful use of it in discussions and speeches. In certain respects he was a man endowed with genius. He had ideas that no one else would ever have thought of, ideas that resulted in the ending of great difficulties, sometimes by measures of an astonishing simplicity or brutality."
Many billions of marks would be needed to begin the great socioeconomic revolution that was destined, as Hitler had always intended, to make Germany once again the European leader in industry and commerce and, most urgently, to rapidly wipe out unemployment in Germany. Where would the money be found? And, once obtained, how would these funds be allotted to ensure maximum effectiveness in their investment?

Hitler was by no means a dictator in matters of the economy. He was, rather, a stimulator. His government would undertake to do only that which private initiative could not.

Hitler believed in the importance of individual creative imagination and dynamism, in the need for every person of superior ability and skill to assume responsibility.

He also recognized the importance of the profit motive. Deprived of the prospect of having his efforts rewarded, the person of ability often refrains from running risks. The economic failure of Communism has demonstrated this. In the absence of personal incentives and the opportunity for real individual initiative, the Soviet "command economy" lagged in all but a few fields, its industry years behind its competitors.

State monopoly tolls the death of all initiative, and hence of all progress.

For all men selflessly to pool their wealth might be marvelous, but it is also contrary to human nature. Nearly every man desires that his labor shall improve his own condition and that of his family, and feels that his brain, creative imagination, and persistence well deserve their reward.

Because it disregarded these basic psychological truths, Soviet Communism, right to the end, wallowed in economic mediocrity, in spite of its immense reservoir of manpower, its technical expertise, and its abundant natural resources, all of which ought to have made it an industrial and technological giant.

Hitler was always adverse to the idea of state management of the economy. He believed in elites. "A single idea of genius," he used to say, "has more value than a lifetime of conscientious labor in an office."

Just as there are political or intellectual elites, so also is there an industrial elite. A manufacturer of great ability should not be restrained, hunted down by the internal revenue services like a criminal, or be unappreciated by the public. On the contrary, it is important for economic development that the industrialist be encouraged morally and materially, as much as possible.

The most fruitful initiatives Hitler would take from 1933 on would be on behalf of private enterprise. He would keep an eye on the quality of their directors, to be sure, and would shunt aside incompetents, quite a few of them at times, but he also supported the best ones, those with the keenest minds, the most imaginative and bold, even if their political opinions did not always agree with his own.

"There is no question," he stated very firmly, "of dismissing a factory owner or director under the pretext that he is not a National Socialist."

Hitler would exercise the same moderation, the same pragmatism, in the administrative as well as in the industrial sphere.
What he demanded of his co-workers, above all, was competence and effectiveness. The great majority of Third Reich functionaries - some 80 percent-were never enrolled in the National Socialist party.
Several of Hitler's ministers, like Konstantin von Neurath and Schwerin von Krosigk, and ambassadors to such key posts as Prague, Vienna and Ankara, were not members of the party. But they were capable..

"Herr Schacht," he said, "we are assuredly in agreement on one point: no other single task facing the government at the moment can be so truly urgent as conquering unemployment. That will take a lot of money. Do you see any possibility of finding it apart from the Reichsbank?" And after a moment, he added: "How much would it take? Do you have any idea?"

Wishing to win Schacht over by appealing to his ambition, Hitler smiled and then asked: "Would you be willing to once again assume presidency of the Reichsbank?" Schacht let on that he had a sentimental concern for Dr. Luther, and did not want to hurt the incumbent's feelings. Playing along, Hitler reassured Schacht that he would find an appropriate new job elsewhere for Luther.
Schacht then pricked up his ears, drew himself up, and focused his big round eyes on Hitler: "Well, if that's the way it is," he said, "then I am ready to assume the presidency of the Reichsbank again."
His great dream was being realized. Schacht had been president of the Reichsbank between 1923 and 1930, but had been dismissed. Now he would return in triumph. He felt vindicated. Within weeks, the ingenious solution to Germany's pressing financial woes would burst forth from his inventive brain.

"It was necessary," Schacht later explained, "to discover a method that would avoid inflating the investment holdings of the Reichsbank immoderately and consequently increasing the circulation of money excessively."

"Therefore," he went on, "I had to find some means of getting the sums that were lying idle in pockets and banks, without meaning for it to be long term and without having it undergo the risk of depreciation. That was the reasoning behind the Mefo bonds."

What were these "Mefo" bonds? Mefo was a contraction of the Metallurgische Forschungs-GmbH (Metallurgic Research Company). With a startup capitalization of one billion marks - which Hitler and Schacht arranged to be provided by the four giant firms of Krupp, Siemens, Deutsche Werke and Rheinmetall-this company would eventually promote many billions of marks worth of investment.

Enterprises, old and new, that filled government orders had only to draw drafts on Mefo for the amounts due. These drafts, when presented to the Reichsbank, were immediately convertible into cash. The success of the Mefo program depended entirely on public acceptance of the Mefo bonds. But the wily Schacht had planned well. Since Mefo bonds were short-term bonds that could be cashed in at any time, there was no real risk in buying, accepting or holding them. They bore an interest of four percent-a quite acceptable figure in those days-whereas banknotes hidden under the mattress earned nothing. The public quickly took all this into consideration and eagerly accepted the bonds. While the Reichsbank was able to offer from its own treasury a relatively insignificant 150 million marks for Hitler's war on unemployment, in just four years the German public subscribed more than 12 billion marks worth of Mefo bonds!

These billions, the fruit of the combined imagination, ingenuity and astuteness of Hitler and Schacht, swept away the temporizing and fearful conservatism of the bankers. Over the next four years, this enormous credit reserve would make miracles possible.

Soon after the initial billion-mark credit, Schacht added another credit of 600 million in order to finance the start of Hitler's grand program for highway construction. This Autobahn program provided immediate work for 100,000 of the unemployed, and eventually assured wages for some 500,000 workers.

As large as this outlay was, it was immediately offset by a corresponding cutback in government unemployment benefits, and by the additional tax revenue generated as a result of the increase in living standard (sping) of the newly employed.

Within a few months, thanks to the credit created by the Mefo bonds, private industry once again dared to assume risks and expand. Germans returned to work by the hundreds of thousands.

Was Schacht solely responsible for this extraordinary turnaround? After the war, he answered for himself as a Nuremberg Tribunal defendant, where he was charged with having made possible the Reich's economic revival:

I don't think Hitler was reduced to begging for my help. If I had not served him, he would have found other methods, other means. He was not a man to give up. It's easy enough for you to say, Mr. Prosecutor, that I should have watched Hitler die and not lifted a finger. But the entire working class would have died with him!

Even Marxists recognized Hitler's success, and their own failure. In the June 1934 issue of the Zeitschrift fï¿½r Sozialismus, the journal of the German Social Democrats in exile, this acknowledgement appears: Faced with the despair of proletarians reduced to joblessness, of young people with diplomas and no future, of the middle classes of merchants and artisans condemned to bankruptcy, and of farmers terribly threatened by the collapse in agricultural prices, we all failed. We weren't capable of offering the masses anything but speeches about the glory of socialism.

VI. The Social Revolution
Hitler's tremendous social achievement in putting Germany's six million unemployed back to work is seldom acknowledged today. Although it was much more than a transitory achievement, "democratic" historians routinely dismiss it in just a few lines. Since 1945, not a single objective scholarly study has been devoted to this highly significant, indeed unprecedented, historical phenomenon.
Similarly neglected is the body of sweeping reforms that dramatically changed the condition of the worker in Germany. Factories were transformed from gloomy caverns to spacious and healthy work centers, with natural lighting, surrounded by gardens and playing fields. Hundreds of thousands of attractive houses were built for working class families. A policy of several weeks of paid vacation was introduced, along with week and holiday trips by land and sea. A wide-ranging program of physical and cultural education for young workers was established, with the world's best system of technical training. The Third Reich's social security and workers' health insurance system was the world's most modern and complete.
This remarkable record of social achievement is routinely hushed up today because it is embarrasses those who uphold the orthodox view of the Third Reich. Otherwise, readers might begin to think that perhaps Hitler was the greatest social builder of the twentieth century..

Nevertheless, restoring work and bread to millions of unemployed who had been living in misery for years; restructuring industrial life; conceiving and establishing an organization for the effective defense and betterment of the nation's millions of wage earners; creating a new bureaucracy and judicial system that guaranteed the civic rights of each member of the national community, while simultaneously holding each person to his or her responsibilities as a German citizen: this organic body of reforms was part of a single, comprehensive plan, which Hitler had conceived and worked out years earlier.
Without this plan, the nation would have collapsed into anarchy. All-encompassing, this program included broad industrial recovery as well as detailed attention to even construction of comfortable inns along the new highway network.

It took several years for a stable social structure to emerge from the French Revolution. The Soviets needed even more time: five years after the Bolshevik revolution of 1917, hundreds of thousands of Russians were still dying of hunger and disease. In Germany, by contrast, the great machinery was in motion within months, with organization and accomplishment quickly meshing together..

Hitler personally dug the first spadeful of earth for the first Autobahn highway, linking Frankfurt-am-Main with Darmstadt. For the occasion, he brought along Dr. Schacht, the man whose visionary credit wizardry had made the project possible. The official procession moved ahead, three cars abreast in front, then six across, spanning the entire width of the autobahn..

Hitler's plan to build thousands of low-cost homes also demanded a vast mobilization of manpower. He had envisioned housing that would be attractive, cozy, and affordable for millions of ordinary German working-class families. He had no intention of continuing to tolerate, as his predecessors had, cramped, ugly "rabbit warren" housing for the German people. The great barracks-like housing projects on the outskirts of factory towns, packed with cramped families, disgusted him.

The greater part of the houses he would build were single story, detached dwellings, with small yards where children could romp, wives could grow vegetable and flower gardens, while the bread-winners could read their newspapers in peace after the day's work. These single-family homes were built to conform to the architectural styles of the various German regions, retaining as much as possible the charming local variants.

Wherever there was no practical alternative to building large apartment complexes, Hitler saw to it that the individual apartments were spacious, airy and enhanced by surrounding lawns and gardens where the children could play safely.

The new housing was, of course, built in conformity with the highest standards of public health, a consideration notoriously neglected in previous working-class projects.

Generous loans, amortizable in ten years, were granted to newly married couples so they could buy their own homes. At the birth of each child, a fourth of the debt was cancelled. Four children, at the normal rate of a new arrival every two and a half years, sufficed to cancel the entire loan debt.

Once, during a conversation with Hitler, I expressed my astonishment at this policy. "But then, you never get back the total amount of your loans?," I asked. "How so?" he replied, smiling. "Over a period of ten years, a family with four children brings in much more than our loans, through the taxes levied on a hundred different items of consumption." As it happened, tax revenues increased every year, in proportion to the rise in expenditures for Hitler's social programs. In just a few years, revenue from taxes tripled. Hitler's Germany never experienced a financial crisis.

To stimulate the moribund economy demanded the nerve, which Hitler had, to invest money that the government didn't yet have, rather than passively waiting-in accordance with "sound" financial principles-for the economy to revive by itself.

Today, our whole era is dying economically because we have succumbed to fearful hesitation. Enrichment follows investment, not the other way around..

Even before the year 1933 had ended, Hitler had succeeded in building 202,119 housing units. Within four years he would provide the German people with nearly a million and a half (1,458,128) new dwellings! Moreover, workers would no longer be exploited as they had been. A month's rent for a worker could not exceed 26 marks, or about an eighth of the average wage then. Employees with more substantial salaries paid monthly rents of up to 45 marks maximum.

Equally effective social measures were taken in behalf of farmers, who had the lowest incomes. In 1933 alone 17,611 new farm houses were built, each of them surrounded by a parcel of land one thousand square meters in size. Within three years, Hitler would build 91,000 such farmhouses..

Everywhere industry was hiring again, with some firms-like Krupp, IG Farben and the large automobile manufacturers-taking on new workers on a very large scale. As the country became more prosperous, car sales increased by more than 80,000 units in 1933 alone. Employment in the auto industry doubled. Germany was gearing up for full production, with private industry leading the way.

The new government lavished every assistance on the private sector, the chief factor in employment as well as production. Hitler almost immediately made available 500 million marks in credits to private business.

This start-up assistance given to German industry would repay itself many times over. Soon enough, another two billion marks would be loaned to the most enterprising companies. Nearly half would go into new wages and salaries, saving the treasury an estimated three hundred million marks in unemployment benefits. Added to the hundreds of millions in tax receipts spurred by the business recovery, the state quickly recovered its investment, and more.

Hitler's entire economic policy would be based on the following equation: risk large sums to undertake great public works and to spur the renewal and modernization of industry, then later recover the billions invested through invisible and painless tax revenues. It didn't take long for Germany to see the results of Hitler's recovery formula.

Economic recovery, as important as it was, nevertheless wasn't Hitler's only objective. As he strived to restore full employment, Hitler never lost sight of his goal of creating a organization powerful enough to stand up to capitalist owners and managers, who had shown little concern for the health and welfare of the entire national community.

Hitler would impose on everyone-powerful boss and lowly wage earner alike-his own concept of the organic social community. Only the loyal collaboration of everyone could assure the prosperity of all classes and social groups.

Consistent with their doctrine, Germany's Marxist leaders had set class against class, helping to bring the country to the brink of economic collapse. Deserting their Marxist unions and political parties in droves, most workers had come to realize that strikes and grievances their leaders incited only crippled production, and thus the workers as well.

By the of 1932, in any case, the discredited labor unions were drowning in massive debt that realistically could never be repaid. Some of the less scrupulous union officials, sensing the oncoming catastrophe, had begun stealing hundreds of thousands of marks from the workers they represented. The Marxist leaders had failed: socially, financially and morally.

Every joint human activity requires a leader. The head of a factory or business is also the person naturally responsible for it. He oversees every aspect of production and work. In Hitler's Germany, the head of a business had to be both a capable director and a person concerned for the social justice and welfare of his employees. Under Hitler, many owners and managers who had proven to be unjust, incompetent or recalcitrant lost their jobs, or their businesses.

A considerable number of legal guarantees protected the worker against any abuse of authority at the workplace. Their purpose was to insure that the rights of workers were respected, and that workers were treated as worthy collaborators, not just as animated tools. Each industrialist was legally obliged to collaborate with worker delegates in drafting shop regulations that were not imposed from above but instead adapted to each business enterprise and its particular working conditions. These regulations had to specify "the length of the working day, the time and method of paying wages, and the safety rules, and to be posted throughout the factory," within easy access of both the worker whose interests might be angered and the owner or manager whose orders might be subverted.

The thousands of different, individual versions of such regulations served to create a healthy rivalry, with every factory group vying to outdo the others in efficiency and justice.

One of the first reforms to benefit German workers was the establishment of paid vacations. In France, the leftist Popular Front government would noisily claim, in 1936, to have originated legally mandated paid vacations-and stingy ones at that, only one week per year. But it was actually Hitler who first established them, in 1933 -- and they were two or three times more generous.

Under Hitler, every factory employee had the legal right to paid vacation. Previously, paid vacations had not normally exceed four or five days, and nearly half of the younger workers had no vacation time at all. If anything, Hitler favored younger workers; the youngest workers received more generous vacations. This was humane and made sense: a young person has more need of rest and fresh air to develop his maturing strength and vigor. Thus, they enjoyed a full 18 days of paid vacation per year.

Today, more than half a century later, these figures have been surpassed, but in 1933 they far exceeded European norms.
The standard vacation was twelve days. Then, from the age of 25 on, it went up to 18 days. After ten years with the company, workers got a still longer vacation: 21 days, or three times what the French socialists would grant the workers of their country in 1936.
Hitler introduced the standard forty-hour work week in Europe. As for overtime work, it was now compensated, as nowhere else in the continent at the time, at an increased pay rate. And with the eight-hour work day now the norm, overtime work became more readily available.

In another innovation, work breaks were made longer: two hours each day, allowing greater opportunity for workers to relax, and to make use of the playing fields that large industries were now required to provide.

Whereas a worker's right to job security had been virtually non-existent, now an employee could no longer be dismissed at the sole discretion of the employer. Hitler saw to it that workers' rights were spelled out and enforced. Henceforth, an employer had to give four weeks notice before firing an employee, who then had up to two months to appeal the dismissal. Dismissals could also be annulled by the "Courts of Social Honor" (Ehrengerichte).

This Court was one of three great institutions that were established to protect German workers. The others were the "Labor Commissions" and the "Council of Trust."

The "Council of Trust" (Vertrauensrat) was responsible for establishing and developing a real spirit of community between management and labor. "In every business enterprise," the 1934 "Labor Charter" law stipulated, "the employer and head of the enterprise (Fï¿½hrer), the employees and workers, personnel of the enterprise, shall work jointly toward the goal of the enterprise and the common good of the nation."

No longer would either be exploited by the other-neither the worker by arbitrary whim of the employer, nor the employer through the blackmail of strikes for political ends.

Article 35 of the "Labor Charter" law stated: "Every member of an enterprise community shall assume the responsibility required by his position in said common enterprise." In short, each enterprise would be headed by a dynamic executive, charged with a sense of the greater community-no longer a selfish capitalist with unconditional, arbitrary power.

"The interest of the community may require that an incapable or unworthy employer be relieved of his duties," the "Labor Charter" stipulated. The employer was no longer unassailable, an all-powerful boss with the last word on hiring and firing his staff. He, too, would be subject to the workplace regulations, which he was now obliged to respect no less than the least of his employees. The law conferred the honor and responsibility of authority on the employer only insofar as he merited it..

In the Third Reich, the worker knew that "exploitation of his physical strength in bad faith or in violation of his honor" was no longer tolerated. He had obligations to the community, but he shared these obligations with every other member of the enterprise, from the chief executive to the messenger boy. Finally, the German worker had clearly defined social rights, which were arbitrated and enforced by independent agencies. And while all this had been achieved in an atmosphere of justice and moderation, it nevertheless constituted a genuine social revolution..

Factories and shops, large and small, were altered or transformed to conform to the strictest standards of cleanliness and hygiene: interiors, so often dark and stifling, were opened up to light; playing fields were constructed; rest areas where workers could unbend during break, were set aside; employee cafeterias and respectable locker rooms were opened. The larger industrial establishments, in addition to providing the normally required conventional sports facilities, were obliged to put in swimming pools!

In just three years, these achievements would reach unimagined heights: more than two thousand factories refitted and beautified; 23,000 work premises modernized; 800 buildings designed exclusively for meetings; 1,200 playing fields; 13,000 sanitary facilities; 17,000 cafeterias.

To assure the healthy development of the working class, physical education courses were instituted for younger workers. Some 8,000 were eventually organized. Technical training was equally emphasized. Hundreds of work schools, and thousands of technical courses were created. There were examinations for professional competence, and competitions in which generous prizes were awarded to outstanding masters of their craft.

Eight hundred departmental inspectors and 17,300 local inspectors were employed to conscientiously monitor and promote these improvements. To provide affordable vacations for German workers on a hitherto unprecedented scale, Hitler established the "Strength through Joy" program. As a result, hundreds of thousands of workers were now able to make relaxing vacation trips on land and sea each summer. Magnificent cruise ships were built, and special trains brought vacationers to the mountains and the seashore. In just a few years,

Germany's working-class tourists would log a distance equivalent to 54 times the circumference of the earth! And thanks to generous state subsidies, the cost to workers of these popular vacation excursions was nearly insignificant..

Was Hitler's transformation of the lot of the working class authoritarian? Without a doubt. And yet, for a people that had grown sick and tired of anarchy, this new authoritarianism wasn't regarded as an imposition. In fact, people have always accepted a strong man's leadership.

In any case, there is no doubt that the attitude of the German working class, which was still two-thirds non-Nazi at the start of 1933, soon changed completely. As Belgian author Marcel Laloire noted at the time:

When you make your way through the cities of Germany and go into the working-class districts, go through the factories, the construction yards, you are astonished to find so many workers on the job sporting the Hitler insignia, to see so many flags with the swastika, black on a bright red background, in the most densely populated districts. Hitler's "German Labor Front" (Deutsche Arbeitsfront), which incorporated all workers and employers, was for the most part eagerly accepted. The steel spades of the sturdy young lads of the "National Labor Service" (Reichsarbeitsdienst) could also be seen gleaming along the highways.

Hitler created the National Labor Service not only to alleviate unemployment, but to bring together, in absolute equality, and in the same uniform, both the sons of millionaires and the sons of the poorest families for several months' common labor and living. All performed the same work, all were subject to the same discipline; they enjoyed the same pleasures and benefited from the same physical and moral development. At the same construction sites and in the same barracks, Germans became conscious of what they had in common, grew to understand one another, and discarded their old prejudices of class and caste.

After a hitch in the National Labor Service, a young worker knew that the rich man's son was not a pampered monster, while the young lad of wealthy family knew that the worker's son had no less honor than a nobleman or an heir to riches; they had lived and worked together as comrades. Social hatred was vanishing, and a socially united people was being born.

Hitler could go into factories-something few men of the so-called Right would have risked in the past-and hold forth to crowds of workers, at times in the thousands, as at the huge Siemens works. "In contrast to the von Papens and other country gentlemen," he might tell them, "in my youth I was a worker like you. And in my heart of hearts, I have remained what I was then."

During his twelve years in power, no untoward incident ever occurred at any factory he visited. Hitler was at home when he went among the people, and he was received like a member of the family returning home after making a success of himself.

But the Chancellor of the Third Reich wanted more than popular approval. He wanted that approval to be freely, widely, and repeatedly expressed by popular vote. No people was ever be more frequently asked for their electoral opinion than the German people of that era-five times in five years.

For Hitler, it was not enough that the people voted from time to time, as in the previous democratic system. In those days, voters were rarely appealed to, and when they expressed an opinion, they were often ill-informed and apathetic. After an election, years might go by, during which the politicians were heedless and inaccessible, the electorate powerless to vote on their actions.

To enable the German public to express its opinion on the occasion of important events of social, national, or international significance, Hitler provided the people a new means of approving or rejecting his own actions as Chancellor: the plebiscite.

Hitler recognized the right of all the people, men and women alike, to vote by secret ballot: to voice their opinion of his policies, or to make a well-grounded judgment on this or that great decision in domestic or foreign affairs. Rather than a formalistic routine, democracy became a vital, active program of supervision that was renewed annually.

The articles of the "Plebiscite Law" were brief and clear:

1.The Reich government may ask the people whether or not it approves of a measure planned by or taken by the government. This may also apply to a law.

2. A measure submitted to plebiscite will be considered as established when it receives a simple majority of the votes. This will apply as well to a law modifying the Constitution.

3. If the people approves the measure in question, it will be applied in conformity with article III of the Law for Overcoming the Distress of the People and the Reich.

The Reich Interior Ministry is authorized to take all legal and administrative measures necessary to carry out this law.
Berlin, July 14, 1933.
Hitler, Frick..

From the first months of 1933, his accomplishments were public fact, for all to see. Before end of the year, unemployment in Germany had fallen from more than 6,000,000 to 3,374,000. Thus, 2,627,000 jobs had been created since the previous February, when Hitler began his "gigantic task!" A simple question: Who in Europe ever achieved similar results in so short a time?..

In his detailed and critical biography of Hitler, Joachim Fest limited his treatment of Hitler's extraordinary social achievements in 1933 to a few paragraphs. All the same, Fest did not refrain from acknowledging:

The regime insisted that it was not the rule of one social class above all others, and by granting everyone opportunities to rise, it in fact demonstrated class neutrality-These measures did indeed break through the old, petrified social structures. They tangibly improved the material condition of much of the population. (J. Fest, Hitler, pp. 434-435.)

Not without reason were the swastika banners waving proudly throughout the working-class districts where, just a year ago, they had been unceremoniously torn down.

Right. And there are a LOT of benefits available to the legally-married. And artificially/arbitrarily-added religious embellishments add ZERO legal value to a marriage. They do NOTHING to legitimize it.

Why aren't those firefighters being held for court and anticipated prison time and making restitution to the Cranicks?

Those firefighters are less than human, less than worse case sociopaths
... I don't want them as my neighbors and them living in my same community would make me feel uncomfortable. They are their bosses need to be sent to an island where they will be no threat to us from there.

It is past time for drastic and severe actions against our public servants.

JS

The conservative vision was on full display last week in Obion County, Tennessee. In this rural section of Tennessee, Gene Cranickï¿½s home caught on fire. As the Cranicks fled their home, their neighbors alerted the countyï¿½s firefighters, who soon arrived at the scene. Yet when the firefighters arrived, they refused to put out the fire, saying that the family failed to pay the annual subscription fee to the fire department. Because the countyï¿½s fire services for rural residences is based on household subscription fees, the firefighters, fully equipped to help the Cranicks, stood by and watched as the home burned to the ground:

You must be a fool. It is all in your head. Government has as much authority, power and respect as the people it governs will allow it ... if you haven't noticed, that is not much today.

If you are still into government worship, I understand how the landscape will look different to you; But, realize, the people in mental institutions which are locked into the "reality they live" are much in the same predicament--it sure looks real to them!

In truth, glimpse the world in reality ... drugs have never been easier to obtain ... guns have never been easier to obtain ... prostitutes have never been easier to obtain ... more laws are being broken in front of me than I can shake a stick at ... drive into the bad part of the city you live in, see if it isn't scarier than it has ever been (if in doubt, ask a cop) ... etc., etc.

And, you stand there and act as if I am going to believe there is respect for the law left? That anyone has respect for any sheet of paper that government issues?

You are joking right? And, if I have gone off the deep edge and this is not happening right before my eyes ... then brother, this is one hell of a nightmare I am living through!

I asked my wife, she remembers as I, we may be mistaken, but in 1970 when we wed in a Catholic church, the only paper we can remember was one saying our blood types were compatibly for some damn reason ... perhaps something about a possible chance of death or defect in the offspring if incompatible ...

The paper work is in a bank lockbox so we can't check just now ... it sounds like there have been changes since then ...

- Every place. There's nothing illegal about saying you're married.
It's only when
- you want the state to recognise your marriage that you have to play by their
- rules. If you want to file married tax returns, you have to have a state
- recognised marriage.

IIRC : In many "Common Law Marriage" States

Signing and Filling a State and/or Federal Tax Return -means- From That Point {Day} Forward :
YOU ARE LEGALLY MARRIED [.]

Would this be a Back-Door for LGBT Marriage in some/many "Common Law Marriage" States ?

Also a good deal - the Icom IC-7000 - no synch detection but has continuously variable SSB and AM bandwidth - the AM bw is adjustable from 200hz - 10 kHz - and it sounds great in AM at the wide bandwidth.

The fact that I exist in the world absolutely means dust will settle on me ... and has about as much meaning to marriage as marriage to the dust on me.

If you took away all government benefits, the effect on valid marriage would be zero. The government give tax breaks to the rich, also ... the ways of government are a mystery to logic, reason and sanity ...

yep, if there is even a slight chance to be able to rape a country, you will see a austrian/chicago school of economics type, shilling for corporations disguised as economists, pushing for polices to rape, exploit, and pillage.

Serial ports and parallel ports are both great for connecting homemade devices and in a few cases a USB to serial converter is not quite good enough to replace the real thing.

Right. And there are a LOT of benefits available to the legally-married. And artificially/arbitrarily-added religious embellishments add ZERO legal value to a marriage. They do NOTHING to legitimize it.

Had I become interested in computers at a much younger age, I might have tinkered with homemade devices to attach to serial ports. Problem there is that computers weren't exactly ubiquitous back then so I tinkered with cars instead.

I can see your point where the USB converter might not be ideal. I suppose, if you really needed a serial port or two on one of the current desktops, you could always add a serial port card. That would give you the appropriate low level access to the hardware that you might need for your projects.

All these electronic doodads are way to small for my fumbling old fingers and ancient eyesight. I'll just stick to pounding away at the keyboard! ;-)

The only things sane to say about marriage are the following:

1) Marriage is only valid between 1 man and 1 woman.
2) Marriage was given to the first man and the first woman by God. The oldest existing record of humankind bears this out as fact. This was a time before government and institutions of man ... this authority cannot be usurped by government(s.)
3) Homosexuals are an abomination.
4) The church has the only recognizable authority over marriage.
5) Idiots and morons in government can pass any rules, regulations and laws which their treasonous actions will allow ... a sane person will simply ignore them.
6) The government IS the majority of the people. The present bunch occupying our public servant offices only have valid authority when representing, acting in and carryout out the wishes and best interests of the people.

The truth, logic and reason of the above is so blatantly self-evident that no sane individual can find legitimate argument with these facts and truths. Free your mind, recognize the truth and be free ...

Prove yourself a fool and dispute the above!

I would follow a God which asks of me to follow the Ten Commandments. I would follow Jesus's teachings ... indeed, when one see the benefits one reaps from leading a life which involves attempting to structure ones self, ones actions and ones beliefs from such followings, as well as choosing friends which follow such teachings, there really is not a second choice ...

Oh, it is much worse that that. I am absolutely arrogant in my belief your own beliefs, to which the freedoms of America entitle you.

Find something on a freq which is interesting! SW just isn't what it used to be, yanno'?

But, share if you find something better than the same old rag chew of the ham bands or some religious rantings of "millionaire preachers", or the same old "politically correct dribble" flowing out of the country sanctioned stations ... I am listening. And, number stations I can do without!

453. H-P employees,stockholders ,clients and Security Clearance officers : Open letter , questions and warnings about the next CEO

The choice of Leo Apotheker as new CEO of H-P by its Board of Directors does not inspire any confidence and already there are a lot of lies in the air.

a) Is well known within the Industry that the CEO of Oracle and friend of Apotheker , Ellison, wanted for a long time to bring down the price of H-P stock so that he could buy its assets and stock cheap, and many consider the "Hurd -Fischer" affair a total fabrication to that end.

Of course these 2 will try even to dismiss they know each other, the fact is that Oracle wants H-P and cheap.

b) while at SAP and before his resignation , Apotheker was found to slow releases of certain software products that later Oracle got to the markets first, and Apotheker and Ellison are very good friends, no matter what they say they share many interests ,partners and friends in their circles in Tel-Aviv (at least one , Apotheker , is an honorary citizen of that Middle East Country)

c) is well known in the European Union that Apotheker is a member and big supporter of certain militant orthodox groups from the Middle East and he (as well as Ellison and many others) are special advisers to some members of the Intelligence , Military ,Finance and Government of that small Middle East country.

d) Apotheker holds interests in various Venture Capital and Investments companies that could get special contracts and long term deals from H-P , deals that could be very bad financial decisions for the Stockholders,Retirees and Workers of H-P and a huge conflict of interest.

e) the employees (as well as retirees , bond and stockholders) from H-P will have to look very closely at these key assets and issues :

1) All cash, debt and reserves of H-P , so that well known
Money
Managers and Private Equity friends and partners of Apotheker do not get special deals and long term "adviser and management" contracts with huge fees and bonuses.

2) new products, software and hardware, do not get postponed so that Oracle or others can get them to market first, like many say was the case in SAP.

3) the vital new line of Palm and mobile software/hardware technologies do not end up creating income or royalties for the friends of Apotheker in the Middle East and others .

4) Patents and other assets do not get entangled with these special interests from the Middle East or some workers inside H-P that are from that group and with the same agenda , and which many say were the ones who pushed the most to have Apotheker nominated, a take-over from within.

5) Involve H-P in bringing into the Company or the USA workforce certain members of Apotheker's circle with the excuse that they are the only ones that can do certain jobs, Apotheker is going to try to bring into H-P his neocon team to slowly take over key positions and start controlling the company, and will the employees and stockholders inside H-P wait and watch the store ? with the Rule of Law ?

f) as H-P holds key Military,Security,Intelligence and Law Enforcement Contracts in the USA , the CEO of the company should and must have a full security clearance from the Government, and in my opinion, the new appointed CEO of H-P is not fit to get them, but will Washington D.C. make an exception and break its own rules ?

This appointment shows huge gaps in the future success of H-P and the country as a whole ,since H-P is a key company for the whole country, and now more so with new mobile solutions for the global markets ready to go in before the key 2010 Holiday season .

This appointment shows in my opinion a lot of "questions and weaknesses " with the Board of Directors, as well as an insult to many top executives in the Company, and stockholders must make sure their interests are not being harmed.

H-P Stockholders and employees must remember that the brand new SEC regulations let 3% of the stock, investors or groups of shareholders that have hold the stock for at least 3 years , to put candidates on proxy statements , nominate at least one director and as much as 25 % of the Board, etc., so since the most important thing is to make sure HP reaches its full potential right now with all its software and hardware components , there are many options and active choices to defend this vital USA asset, the key is to speak up before its too late.

True. But I only said it sounded great at the wide bandwidth like a Drake R-8. I would not recommend it for CW reception. It does have a sensitive receiver and rates about the same in filter rejection as the Yaesu FT-2000 in Sherwood's list. At under $1300 it is not a bad deal considering you get the transmitter included.

Not meaning to hijack, but I am concerned that eventually, when I have no choice but to use CFLs, my SW radio listening will suffer. It's my understanding, that they contain a 'mini-starter' which emits RFI. I've experienced problems from flourescent fixture starters that I've replaced which will randomly blank out any AM transmissions. Flicking the light switch off, then on corrects it temporarily.

Anyone comment on the CFLs?

Rather than trying to directly equate (contemporary American) liberals and fascists, it's more useful to find the common defining factor that they both share.

Ultimately, they're both at least authoritarian, trending toward totalitarian if they get the chance.

So, saying that (contemporary American) liberals and facists are both authoritarian is a clearer statement that's more easily understood.

Of course, you have to be sure to include the fact that (contemporary American) conservatives are also authoritarian.

CFL's and long tubes can be radically different animals. One is a linear noise source, so the attenuation with distance is proportional, whereas CFL's represent, more or less, a point source, so attenuation is proportional to the square of the distance. In other words, CFL noise falls off more quickly.

CFL technology can also be quiet different than long tubes. And, with a quality bulb, inherently lower noise.

Early CFL's were quite noisy. Current production CFL's tend to be much quieter, although cheaply made CFL's can still produce small amounts of noise. At a distance of a couple of meters, the noise is not an issue, but cumulatively, they can raise the overall noise floor in your location if many are used.

The good news is that cheap CFL's don't last very long, and must be replaced often until they're gone.

The better news is that with an external antenna of some quality, worked against a good ground, the raised noise floor can be both avoided, and/or overcome.

The Old Testament does say that God likes one race of people more than others. It calls this race the Israelites. Nature wants the most advanced and evolved race to take over. This is obviously the White race. Compare Europe to Africa.

This is the definition of the word "adam" in Strong's Concordance:

"to show blood (in the face), i.e. flush or turn rosy:- be (dyed, made) red (ruddy)."

This can only be describing a White man. Look at people today and see which ones have rosy red cheeks. They are light skinned White people.

The Bible says David was ruddy. This is the definition of the Hebrew word "ruddy":

"reddish (of the hair or of the complexion):-red, ruddy."

David had rosy cheeks (or red hair) and did not look like a typical Jew.

The original Israelites were White people.

Jews are like the American Indians of today. These people say they are Indians but the original Indians were clearly described as having red skin. Today Indians may look brown or white, but not red. Neither are Jews like the original Israelites.

The religious leaders of the Jews were the Pharisees. Jesus condemned them in the harshest words.

Matthew 23:33 "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?"

The New Jewish Encyclopedia, edited by David Bridger, PH.D in association with Samual Wolk, Rabbi, J.S.D, copyright 1962, Published by Behrman House, inc.,1261 Broadway, New York 1, N.Y., Library of Congress Catalog Card Number: 62-17079, says on page 376:

"The Pharisees are therefore regarded as those authorities who helped develop and preserve traditional Judaism as it is known today."

The old drawing of Jesus were probably correct. He probably had blond hair and blue eyes.

John 7:1 "After these things Jesus walked in Galilee: for he would not walk in Judea, because the Jews sought to kill him."

John 20:19 "the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews"

2 Co 11:24 "Of the Jews five times recieved I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned"

Mathew 27: 20+25 "But the chief priests and the elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus...then answered all the people, and said, His blood be on us, and on our children."

Acts 25:24 "ye see this man, about whom all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem and also here, crying that he ought not to live any longer."

John 8:42,44,48 "Jesus said unto them...Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it...Then answered the Jews..."

The major difference was the success of congress in getting the peasants to believe they were acting in their best interest. In North Korea, USSR, Cambodia and today's China (none of which are literally communist) the population knew they were being shafted daily, but they are disarmed. There is no excuse for what the sheep in the U.S. condone. A combination of lies, and stupidity, make it possible.

There is a big difference between allowing a basic civil right and protecting the public health, safety and welfare.

There are three crystal filters before the DSP, but there are high and low pass filters, relays, interconnects to the transmitter. They all affect performance:

You might try reading Acts some time. Through about half of it, the Apostles are deciding how much of the Law of Moses the Gentiles really need to adopt to become Christians.

Pretty much all they were left with was not to share in food offered at pagan ceremonies. That's it. Other than that, do what Jesus said, nothing of which "defines marriage" or condemns homosexuality.

John 8:1-11 gives a pretty clear idea of what Jesus himself thought about the Laws of Moses.

What about protecting children... and protecting others rights.

Gay is NOT a GENDER and male/female are, and genders are worthy of civil rights. SO what "civil right" is there for GAY SEX and PEDOPHILE SEX and BESTIALITY SEX? Remember GAY is NOT a gender, it's a preferred sexual predilection just as heterosexual is a predilection for sex with the opposite sex and NOT another gender.

Obviously since the Government can BAN and make illegal pedophilia which is a predilection for sex with children. The only reason Homosexual behavior is tollerated is that it is presumed to be with consenting adults. But there is NO civil right to sex with anything or anyone you want. Including a predilection for sex in public which is also illegal.

Necrophilia is also a sexual predilection but allowing someone to leave a "last will and testament" to allow them to later be married to their live lover and have sexual relations after death is one I have yet to hear of. I suppose they have civil rights and need to be married....

Then there are the FAMILY predilections of incest where people in the same family want to get married. That sexual predilection also deserves civil rights don't they, be they gay or hetero they should be allowed to marry?

The socialist brand image problem has been mostly corrected, although progressives refuse to acknowledge that their agenda is one and the same with socialism [communism]. KFC may be the result of a name change, but it is still selling Kentucky Fried Chicken. The same is true of socialism -- same product, different name, and bad for your health.

http://www.americanthinker.com/2010/10/theyre_all_socialists_now.html

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6497

Barack Obama did not rise to prominence solely on his own merits
His career has been supported for many years by a socialist network, based in Chicago, but now reaching into every state of the US.

http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/02/obama-file-16-obama-and-legacy-of.html

The network is an activist matrix led by former members of the ’60s radical organisation Students for a Democratic Society (SDS)
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6723

and supporters of Democratic Socialists of America (DSA),
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6428
http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/01/obama-file-7-barack-obama-and.html

Communist Party USA (CPUSA)
http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/02/obama-file-18-will-obama-be-communist.html and the Committees of Correspondence for Democracy and Socialism

http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/08/obama-file-25-ccds-marxist-leninists.html

The network has links to hundreds of leftist organisations including the Progressive Democrats of America,

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=7123

Black Radical Congress,
http://www.blackradicalcongress.org

United For Peace & Justice,
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6166

USAction,
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6729

ACORN
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6968

and several major trade unions.
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6535

The network has been co-operating since at least the early 1980s. Parts of it came together behind Jesse Jackson's failed 1988 US presidential bid and again in the late '90s New Party
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=7434
http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/08/obama-file-22-barack-obama-danny-k.html which helped launch Barack Obama's successful bid for the Illinois State Senate.

http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/01/obama-file-4-obama-was-endorsed-by-far.html

Now the network has come together to put Barack Obama in the White House.

Their ambition doesn't end there however. The network wants to build a movement that will be able to pressure an Obama presidency into legislating for massive social change. They want to relive the 1930s and 1960s with a new "New Deal" and a new civil rights movement.

One prominent tip of the socialist iceberg is a comparitively new organisation–Progressives for Obama (PFO).

According to the PFO website

"We agree that Barack Obama is our best option for President in 2008, and that an independent grassroots effort can help strengthen his campaign.

"It can also strengthen the mandate for his programs for stopping war, promoting global justice and securing our rights, liberties, and economic well-being. More important, independent organization at the base is needed for compelling social change no matter who is in the White House.

"We have understood, from the beginning, that Senator Obama is not a consistent progressive, and often speaks to and from the center of our country's political spectrum–sometimes well, sometimes not. All the more reason, we think, to organize a strong progressive pole, independent of his campaign, to counter rightward drift and push him to do better on issues that will win him more solid and wider support.

"We don't attempt to define 'progressive' here. We're open to all trends, from the socialist left to moderate liberals, who want not only to defeat McCain, but also build the grassroots organizations and networks for wider and deeper change over the longer term.

Writing in The Nation, March 24, 2008,

PGO founder Tom Hayden, Bill Fletcher Jr., Danny Glover and Barbara Ehrenreich explained

"During past progressive peaks in our political history — the late Thirties, the early Sixties — social movements have provided the relentless pressure and innovative ideas that allowed centrist leaders to embrace visionary solutions. We find ourselves in just such a situation today.

"We intend to join and engage with our brothers and sisters in the vast rainbow of social movements to come together in support of Obama's unprecedented campaign and candidacy. Even though it is candidate-centered, there is no doubt that the campaign is a social movement, one greater than the candidate himself ever imagined.

The four founders of PFO are:

TOM HAYDEN — Author of Ending the War in Iraq, a five-time Democratic convention delegate, former state senator, and board member of the Progressive Democrats of America. Hayden was also a founder in 1964 of SDS. According to Discover the Networks http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1334

During the Vietnam War, Hayden traveled many times to North Vietnam, Czechoslovakia, and Paris to strategize with Communist North Vietnamese and Viet Cong leaders on how to defeat America's anti-Communist efforts. He came back from Hanoi proclaiming he had seen "rice roots democracy at work." According to people who were present at the time…Hayden offered advice on conducting psychological warfare against the U.S.

BILL FLETCHER — Originator of the call for founding "Progressives for Obama", is the executive editor of Black Commentator, and founder of the Center for Labor Renewal.

Fletcher is a former Maoist and is currently a leader of Democratic Socialists of America (DSA). In 1998 he was also a founding member of the Communist Party USA (CPUSA) / CCDS / DSA dominated Black Radical Congress.

http://www.blackradicalcongress.org/index.html

BARBARA EHRENREICH – With Hayden, Ehrenreich is a member of The Nation's editorial board. She is an honorary chairman of DSA and was formerly active in the New American Movement-led largely by former SDS and CPUSA activists. According to Discover the Networks http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1058

When the Communist Manifesto was re-released on its 150th anniversary in 1998, Ehrenreich celebrated the event. She noted that in producing the Manifesto as a commercial product, capitalists were – as Lenin had once predicted – providing the rope that eventually would hang them.

DANNY GLOVER – An actor, activist, and chairman of the board of TransAfrica – where he works with two former Communist Party front activists Harry Belafonte and Johnetta Cole. http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=837
Glover is also close to former Berkely mayor Gus Newport, once linked to CPUSA and now active in both DSA and CCDS. He has also been involved with the Black Radical Congress. Glover has close ties to Cuba and according to Discover the Network

"On several occasions, Glover has visited Venezuela and made guest appearances on President Hugo Chavez's television and radio talk show, Hello, President. Glover is a Board member of Venezuela's "TeleSUR" news network, which Chavez created in 2005. http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1119

The list of endorsers on the Progressives for Obama website further illustrates the socialist nature of the organisation

They include:

Rosalyn Baxandall – Marxist.

Paul Buhle – A former member of SDS, one time editor of the original SDS journal Radical America. Currently a DSA leader. http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2020

Who is Mike Klonsky?

Mike Klonsky is one of the founders of Communist Party (Marxist-Leninist) (USA) and the Students for a Democratic Society a fervent Obama supporter, friend and former member of the terrorist group the Weatherman.
http://www.theminorityreportblog.com/story/steven_foley/2008/06/25/introducing_mike_klonsky_another_communist_terrorist_friend_of_obama

(...) a notorious ally of Bill Ayers for many years, Mike Klonsky, is an open member of the Obama campaign. Klonsky runs a blog on the official Obama website here where he claims to be a "professor of education"... and says he blogs for Obama on "education politics and teaching for social justice."

Who is Mike Klonsky? Well, on one level, he might just appear to be a protege of Bill Ayers in the education world. He received, as I detail below, a $175,000 grant from the Ayers/Obama-led Annenberg Challenge to run the Small Schools Workshop that he and Ayers started in Chicago to push their school reform agenda.

But that is only half the story. Klonsky was one of the most destructive hardline maoists in the SDS in the late 60's who emerged from SDS to form a pro-Chinese sect called the October League that later became the Beijing-recognized Communist Party (Marxist-Leninist). As chairman of the party, Klonsky travelled to Beijing itself in 1977 and, literally, toasted the Chinese stalinist leadership who, in turn, "hailed the formation of the CP(ML) as 'reflecting the aspirations of the proletariat and working people,' effectively recognizing the group as the all-but-official US Maoist party." (Elbaum, Revolution in the Air, 228).

I know of no indications that Klonsky has ever expressed any regrets about that activity. Perhaps like his SDS comrade, Ayers, he, too, thinks he did not do enough back then. In my view they did more than enough.

An excellent profile of that maoist milieu is available in a book called Revolution in the Air by Max Elbaum, http://www.amazon.com/Revolution-Air-Sixties-Radicals-Lenin/dp/1844675637/ref=sr_1_13?ie=UTF8&s=books&qid=1214282892&sr=8-13 a first hand participant whose sympathy for the maoism of the period does not get in the way of an excellent account of these idiot savants of the left.

How is it possible that someone of Klonsky's ilk would now be playing a visible role in the Obama campaign itself on such an important issue as education policy - apparently with free reign to push his authoritarian "social justice" agenda?

http://globallabor.blogspot.com/2008/06/that-guy-who-lives-in-my-neighborhood.html

Communist Party National Chair Lays Out Communist Agenda for Obama Administration

Barack Obama has been beholden to the Communist Party USA for decades. From the boyhood mentoring he received from Frank Marshall Davis, to support for his 2004 Senate campaign, ongoing work in Chicago and massive party support in his 2008 presidential run.

Now its payback time.

The Party wants Obama to deliver a new “New Deal” – a massive extension of government and union power that will permanently transform US society.

By using pressure from the “bottom up and the top down”, the Communist Party aims to squeeze the US middle class into accepting its socialist program.

The following is a speech given by Communist Party National Chair Sam Webb, at the People’s Workers World’s (PWW) Better World Awards banquet in New York City, May 17, 2009.

The Obama Socialist / Marxist / Communist Reader

http://therealbarackobama.wordpress.com/2009/01/03/the-obama-socialist-marxist-communist-reader/

THE AUTHOR has spent about half his adult life in his native Austria, in close touch with German thought, and the other half in the United States and England. In the latter period he has become increasingly convinced that some of the forces which destroyed freedom in Germany are also at work here. The very magnitude of the outrages committed by the National Socialists has strengthened the assurance that a totalitarian system cannot happen here. But let us remember that [70] years ago the possibility of such a thing happening in Germany would have appeared just as fantastic not only to nine tenths of the Germans themselves but also to the most hostile foreign observer.

There are many features which were then regarded as "typically German" which are now equally familiar in America and England, and many symptoms that point to a further development in the same direction: the increasing veneration for the state, the fatalistic acceptance of "inevitable trends," the enthusiasm for "organization" of everything (we now call it "planning").

The character of the danger is, if possible, even less understood here than it was in Germany. The supreme tragedy is still not seen that in Germany it was largely people of good will, who, by their socialist policies, prepared the way for the forces which stand for everything they detest. Few recognize that the rise of fascism and Nazism was not a reaction against the socialist trends of the preceding period but a necessary outcome of those tendencies. Yet it is significant that many of the leaders of these movements, from Mussolini down (and including Laval and Quisling) began as socialists and ended as fascists or Nazis. In the democracies at present, many who sincerely hate all of Nazism's manifestations are working for ideals whose realization would lead straight to the abhorred tyranny. Most of the people whose views influence developments are in some measure socialists. They believe that our economic life should be "consciously directed," that we should substitute "economic planning" for the competitive system. Yet is there a greater tragedy imaginable than that, in our endeavor consciously to shape our future in accordance with high ideals, we should in fact unwittingly produce the very opposite of what we have been striving for? - Friedrich A. Hayek (1899-1992)

All forms of collectivism lead logically and inevitably to tyranny. The Soviet Union and Nazi Germany are examples of countries which had gone down “the road to serfdom” and reached tyranny. Within a centrally planned economic system, the distribution and allocation of all resources and goods would devolve onto a small group, which would be incapable of processing all the information pertinent to the appropriate distribution of the resources and goods at the central planners’ disposal. Disagreement about the practical implementation of any economic plan combined with the inadequacy of the central planners' resource management would invariably necessitate coercion (force) in order for anything to be achieved.

Socialism was bound to fail as an economic system because only free markets--powered by individuals wheeling and dealing in their own interest--could generate the information necessary to intelligently coordinate social behavior. In other words, freedom is a necessary input into a prosperous economy.

And the possibility of rational economic planning under socialism? Yes, we ran that experiment as well. The Third World tried it and promptly dropped to income levels last recorded in the Pleistocene Epoch. The Second (Communist) World tried it in massive police-state doses and...well...dissolved.

"Sometimes you have to live a long time just to be proved right."

I sincerely hope that most of you live through what may very possibly become the worst socialist experiment in human history, Barack Hussein Obama.

http://www.reason.com/news/show/33304.html

"(...) economics and the sciences of complex phenomena in general, which include biology, psychology, and so on, cannot be modeled after the sciences that deal with essentially simple phenomena like physics.

"Don't be shocked when I call physics essentially simple phenomena. What I mean is that the theories which you need to explain physics need to contain very few variables. You can easily verify this if you look into the formula appendix to any textbook on physics, where you will find that none of the formulas which state the general laws of physics contain more than two or three variables.

"You can't explain anything of social life with a theory which refers to only two or three variables. The result is that we can never achieve theories which we can use for effective prediction of particular phenomena, because you would have to insert into the blanks of the formula so many particular data that you never know them all. In that sense, our possibility both of explaining and predicting social phenomena is very much more limited than it is in physics.

"Now, this dissatisfies the more ambitious young men. They want to achieve a science which both gives the same exactness of prediction and the same power of control as you achieve in the physical sciences. Even if they know they won't do it, they say, "We must try. We ultimately will discover it." When we embark on this process, we want to achieve a command of social events which is analogous to our command of physical affairs. If they really created a society which was guided by the collective will of the group, that would just stop the process of intellectual progress. Because it would stop this utilization of widely dispersed opinion upon which our society rests and which can only exist in this very complex process which you cannot intellectually master. - Friedrich A. Hayek (1899-1992)

Hayek: "I've always doubted that the socialists had a leg to stand on intellectually. They have improved their argument somehow, but once you begin to understand that prices are an instrument of communication and guidance which embody more information than we directly have, the whole idea that you can bring about the same order based on the division of labor by simple direction falls to the ground. Similarly, the idea [that] you can arrange for distributions of incomes which correspond to some conception of merit or need. If you need prices, including the prices of labor, to direct people to go where they are needed, you cannot have another distribution except the one from the market principle. I think that intellectually there is just nothing left of socialism."

I think they [socialism] could exist as some sort of medieval system. They could exist in that form with a great deal of starvation removing excess population. It's all a question of why should an economy not continue to exist. But whatever economic advance Russia has achieved was, of course, achieved by using the technology developed by the West. I know that the Russians would be the last ones to deny it.

A technology advisor to President Obama founded a group that has been helping Al Jazeera disseminate news footage of Israeli attacks inside the Gaza Strip.

Lawrence Lessig also works closely with a Marxist activist who has argued for the dismantlement of the U.S. capitalist system and whose George Soros-funded group petitions for more government control of the media.

Lessig has been mentioned as a future candidate to head the Federal Communications Commission. He is an activist for reduced legal restrictions on copyright material and advised Obama’s 2008 presidential campaign.

He reportedly has known Obama since their days teaching law at the University of Chicago. Lessig now teaches at Harvard.

In 2001, Lessig founded Creative Commons, a non-profit organization devoted to expanding the range of creative works available for others to build upon legally and to share.

In January 2009, Creative Commons launched a massive repository of broadcast quality video footage, working with Al Jazeera to make the Arab network’s video footage available for free to be downloaded. Lessig’s group mass marketed Al Jazeera’s footage of Israel’s December 2008 war in Gaza targeting Hamas.

Al Jazeera has been widely criticized for disseminating Hamas propaganda, including claims civilians were targeted in Israeli operations. http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6962

During the time it worked with Lessig’s group, Al Jazeera said its online broadcasts increased by over 500 percent, while views of videos on its YouTube channel increased by more than 150 percent.

Lessig, meanwhile, drew some controversy during the 2008 campaign after he circulated a video depicting Jesus lip-syncing to Gloria Gaynor’s late ’70s disco hit “I Will Survive.” In the video, a mock Jesus is seen stripping down to just a diaper while he effeminately struts along a city street and finally gets run over by a speeding bus.

Lessig is a close associate of Robert W. McChesney, http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2227 an avowed Marxist who favors the dismantling of capitalism. McChasney founded Free Press, a George-Soros-funded organization with close ties to the White House that petitions for more government control of the news media.

Lessig has penned numerous oped pieces with McChesney while the duo have worked together on numerous media projects.

WND previously reported Free Press published a study advocating the development of a “world class” government-run media system in the U.S.

http://www.wnd.com/?pageId=156025
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=7103

In May, WND reported Free Press Policy Director Ben Scott was named a policy adviser for innovation at the State Department.

McChesney is a professor at the University of Illinois and former editor of the Marxist journal Monthly Review.

In February 2009, McChesney concluded that capitalism should be dismantled.

“In the end, there is no real answer but to remove brick-by-brick the capitalist system itself, rebuilding the entire society on socialist principles,” wrote McChesney in a column.

The board of Free Press, meanwhile, has included a slew of radicals, such as Obama’s former “green jobs” czar Van Jones, who resigned after his founding of a communist organization was exposed.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2406

Obama’s “Internet czar,” Susan P. Crawford, spoke at a Free Press May 14, 2009, “Changing Media” summit in Washington, D.C., revealed the book “The Manchurian President”.

http://www.indyposted.com/20984/the-manchurian-president-triggers-hate-from-prominent-reporters/

Crawford’s pet project, OneWebNow, lists as “participating organizations” Free Press and the controversial Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now (ACORN).

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupprofile.asp?grpid=6968

Crawford and Kevin Werbach, who co-directed the Obama transition’s FCC’s review team, are advisory board members at Public Knowledge, a George-Soros-funded public interest group.

A Public Knowledge advisory board member is Timothy Wu, who is also chairman of the board for Free Press.

Like Public Knowledge, Free Press also has received funds from Soros’ Open Society Institute.

[nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.]

NO one can marry direct DNA relations(Family) and NO body can marry anyone but the opposite sex.....

Gays would have no physical reason to NOT marry family since they can't produce retarded/weak DNA offspring. So when you allow the gays to marry the Heterosexuals will then be able to complain that their civil rights are being violated by stopping them from marrying their brother or sister or son or daughter. Then using equal protection under the law you would be forced to allow heterosexual family members like brother, sister or father, daughter marriages also.

And that is one reason that Marriage is NOT what is needed for gays. You have a death certificate for a reason and you don't use a death certificate for someones birth, they are for different purposes, as should Marriage NOT be used for both Heterosexual and Homosexual unions. They are two very different applications of law and to use the same document and rules and regulations will be a disservice to one or the other and at some point would lead to violating the "equal protection under the law" part of the constitution.

leads to a logical conclusion ... God would not OK government having anything to say of marriage ... it is his creation under his domain.

I have never been liked by child molesters or homosexuals ...

Here is a nice little site that is one product of homosexuality, in my opinion:

http://www.nambla.org/

Of great insight to into the minds of queers are these two links, found on the page:

http://www.nambla.org/hay2002.htm

http://www.nambla.org/pederasty.htm

A complete read of the above enlightens one to the sickness, depravity and debauchery some attempt to sell you as "another lifestyle." This is why God uses the term ABOMINATION!

I would hesitate to try to count the number of times God changed His mind in the Bible. The lack of consistency, even within chapters, can be mind-boggling.

I don't find that. However, I do find that the whole point of what God is speaking on is missed by some ... like when the homosexuals demand "equality" in marriage and "the tax breaks" and totally miss the whole point of marriage ... it is why homosexual logic looks insane to heterosexuals, a good portion of the time!

Good News Wal*Mart Restocking Good Old Fashion Incandescent Light Bulbs !

Oops one problem they are now Reduced Wattage Incandescent Light Bulbs by Feit and GE

Old* - - - - - Feit* - - - - - GE*
100 Watt = 95 Watt = 90 Watt
75 Watt = 71 Watt = 67 Watt
60 Watt = 57 Watt = xx Watt

* All Rated at 750 Hour Life.

The New "Feit" Incandescent Light Bulbs
are ~5% less Watts

The New "GE" Incandescent Light Bulbs
are ~10% less Watts

? What About the Light Output in Lumens ?

Old Sylvania 100 Watt = 1710 Lumens
Old GE Reveal 100 Watt = 1300 Lumens
New Feit 95 Watt = 1625 Lumens
New GE 90 Watt = 1450 Lumens
-fwiw-
New GE 26 Watt CFL Daylight = 1750 Lumens with a Rated at 8000 Hour Life

The tread seems to be to Reduce the Wattage and the Light Output of the Incandescent Bulbs and Keep the CFLs with the Higher Light Output and Longer Life.

and that is the way i see it ~ RHF

I've a good feeling that the 2230-2330 brodcast on 6130 will make it to ECNA with 100 kW. Sitkunai has made it here with that power many times.

With the probable prices for any new big, black-box receivers, it's hard not to think that the future is in SDR receivers.

The WinRadio new Excalibur HF receiver for about $850 is supposed to be "quite" good.

It just amazes me when these ignorant social conservatives strut around with their flags and waving The Constitution demanding rule by "the majority" not even having a clue: 1. they are not the majority
2. A constitutional republic (especially ours) is designed to protect the rights of all people, not the majority. Whenever conservatives go on and on about "majority rule" they only prove what completely uneducated imbeciles they really are. No wonder the right wing is so against education. It would almost be funny if it wasn't so damned tragic.

So some unalienable rights are more alienable than others?

Your argument falls flat. If it's a choice, then it becomes freedom of expression. Any attempt to portray hetero-marriage as a sacred institution is laughable. Literally. I've been to one wedding, and everyone was tripping.

Naaa, way past that, will just await the revolution now, or things to get better, or things to not ...

It is time to collect your guns, family, food, shelter, medicine and gold and get ready to watch the future as we play with our toys to while-a-way the time ... it is time to relax and enjoy a simple life now, a vacation, if you will. This is the portion of the experience where the ride comes in, you simply stay on-board until a destination is reached.

Those unfortunate and unable to avoid the rat race will have to sit and compete in inflated and ever diminishing financial pools until they either figure it out, or are unable to compete anymore. One must just be in good standing and security when this is all over.

These things have a way of taking care of themselves, in the long run ... just get enough food around you to last a minimum of six months, a shelter you can defend, a good long and short gun for every man and woman in your group, medicine to keep you well (or stuff to barter for medical care), your gold, etc. and drop out of the mess. You can always jump back in at a saner date ...

I don't think anyone is going to easily "fix" this one ...

JS

...because the majority (98% minimum) of the population is incompetent. What is broadcast to them is nothing more than what will get the mindless masses to watch the commercials. Some think it's news. Based upon what they see "on the TV" and what their RULERS tell them, they are in enough fear to follow their marching orders, or accept the fact that the mindless calling them racists have a point.

Civilization has never been in such jeopardy as it is in 2010. That does not preclude, however, the mindless masses from accepting what they are told. As long as it "feels good," and some parasite will confiscate funds from the productive minority to send them more "help." There is no opportunity to stop the demise.

Oh, but it does - there have been versions of it under both MacOS and OS X. Thankfully, Entourage has replaced it these days, though some would say that's not necessarily an improvement.

Anyway, your headers indicate that you're using Microsoft Outlook Express 6.00.2900.3598; if I'm not mistaken, that's the version of Outlook Express that shipped with Windows XP Service Pack 2. So we can infer that you're a Service Pack and a crapload of patches and hotfixes behind current - or maybe you just really like that specific release of Outlook Express, and went to great lengths to make sure that it survived subsequent updates.

Either way, either one of those things pretty much nullifies your opinion regarding matters of a technical nature.

I've seen a lot of MacBooks lately running dual boots (OS-X and XP, Vista or Win7). Since they went to Intel processors, seems a lot of people run Windows on them so they have more software choices.

Nothing nullifies his opinion, either way. It's an OPINION. It just doesn't happen to agree with your own.

If what he's using works for him, his opinion is as valid as your own.

If he doesn't like Macs, his opinion is as valid as your own.
There are significant numbers of individuals here who agree with him. Some, with more technical expertise than yours.

There was a member of this newsgroup, now passed on, who preferred Win 98. It worked for him, got him where he needed to go.
That the rest of the world disowned Win 98 a decade ago was of no consequence. As for his technical expertise...He could hold his own in UNIX, OpenBSD, Windows (through 7), Mac and Linux. And was a developer for a number of them.

He just happened to prefer Win 98. I have no idea why. Nor is it relevant.

Dual-boot or virtual machine; either one works. Most folks go the VM route these days, though there are some cases where only a dual-boot scenario works for certain things.

But for the absolute ne plus ultra in Outlook Express experiences, nothin' beats running it under Windows. It's just so completely in its element.

My iMac, that I bought in 2001, is still running without a reinstall due to a corrupted operating system! All it has had are OS upgrades along the way.

Windoze PCs need a reinstall as often as once a year.

Don't care. Really, I don't. Mac vs. PC is no more interesting than Windows vs. Linux, Atari vs. Amiga, CP/M vs. DOS, or any other retarded
'my OS is better than yours' argument from either recent times or the ages. I'd almost compare it to a Chevy vs. Ford argument, but it's far less interesting than even that. Hell, I've read dosing instructions for cat ear medicine that are more compelling.

> Some, with more technical expertise than yours.

Are you sure about that statement? I mean, you don't know my technical background, and I can assure you that my technical background is PRETTY DAMN BADASS. It rides a motorcycle and rolls its cigarettes up in its sleeve and everything - and watch what you say about it if it's in girls seem to swoon over it, however.

> He just happened to prefer Win 98. I have no idea why. Nor is it relevant.

My opinion is that it is highly relevant. And my opinion is right, and nobody can take that away from me.

Unlike one's innocence. I lost that in a Sarajevo brothel back in '93, but that's a whole other story.

See, there you go with the assumptions again, Pete. How are we ever going to get along in this atmosphere of distrust and suspicion? It's simply not healthy for either us or our relationship.

All that I want is for things to be like they used to be between us - holding hands and watching the sunset from the beach, or laughing as we stroll arm-in-arm through the Arboretum in the springtime. The old magic, Pete, is what I want back. Perhaps I'm just a foolish, dreaming romantic for thinking this, but... Can't we just try?

No, no ladders. Some of the rooms had a pulley system installed, but that wasn't so much to ease access to the facility as to facilitate access, if you get my drift - and I'm pretty sure you do.

Why was he waiting? Was Donkey Kong at the top with an endless supply of his life?

If Donkey Kong wasn't up there, I would totally have climbed that thing.

Fine. If that's how it's going to be, I will. But I warn you, Pete, my attorney appears on both TV and the back of busses. This tells me that he knows how to cover all the bases, and will savage your attorney like a baby in a pit-bull's jaws. Perhaps he will even be responsible for legislation regulating breeding and ownership of his type of lawyer when all of this is said and done, though that may ultimately lead to a race of super-solicitors bent on world domination through creative billing practices. HE'S JUST THAT GOOD.

> And I want my Gary Puckett albums back.

Are MP3s OK? The cat peed on the vinyl, and now I don't want to touch it. Fortunately, I had copied the albums before he relieved himself on them, and some of the covers are still dry. I could scan them and embed them as album art for you, so you wouldn't really be missing out on anything other than ownership of the (cat-piss-soaked) records.

Just because we're having a tiff doesn't mean that I should have to compromise my principles.

Republi-crats = demo-cans = same-old-same-old

Remember all the republicans screaming to elect bush and save us from clinton? Well, we did--and got WORSE!

They are all puppets cut from the same material having their strings pulled by the puppet masters. The real cure is finding the puppet masters, bringing charges against them and imprisoning them, or hanging them for treason. The puppets can join them in their comeuppance.

I would suggest that voting for someone that promises lower taxes and

You know, Pete, this is one area in which we agree. MP3s are the catamite of audio. Pegs on a fence are likely involved, too.

But they are the format I have used. Yes, I know - there are many far-superior alternatives - but the ubiquity of support for the format means that if I wish to enjoy the soothing sounds of Ethel Merman or the comedy stylings of Gilbert Gottfried via a multiplicity of devices, it is the format I must use.

Why would you deny me my music as you have denied our destiny? Can I not keep at least that one small comfort? WHY MUST YOU ROB ME OF EVERYTHING, RENDING MY HEART IN THE PROCESS?

I am reaching out to you, Pete. Those MP3s are a token of my affection. If ever our time together meant anything to you, you will understand this.

I do not control the cat's urinary activities; this was explained up front. You seemed OK with it, and the time to have said otherwise is now long past. The wonder of those hours cannot heal the wounds I am afflicted with now.

> Story of my life. Always a bride, never an altar boy.

Look, I bought you the outfit - and as far as I am aware, it still hangs unsullied in your wardrobe. No, I don't want it back; the memories it would bring with it are too painful to face. But its pristine condition is entirely attributable to your refusal to wear it when it was presented to you (in a rather nice velvet-lined wooden box, I might add). Much like the cat and his mictural activities, that is something entirely beyond my control.

My recollection is that Free Agent was decent years ago, but I really have no idea what the current state of play is with it.

Check out Thunderbird 3; it's free and a decent NNTP client. As an added bonus, it'll also handle your email quite well.

No worries. One thing I will warn you about TB3: its integrated RSS capabilities suck. This may not be a consideration for you depending on whether or not you use RSS, but you're probably better off using a browser extension or similar at this point for it.

I really wish they'd improve that, but nobody seems motivated to put in the effort at this time.

I have a 2002 G-4 700 iMac, still running great with Tiger-10.4(the highest it can go since it is PPC, not Intel). Has all our iPhotos and iTunes(backed up on an external 320gig HDD). It is still a great, if slow machine.
All my other machines are REAL IBM iron, running Linux.

Whatever has a republi-crat done which a demo-can has not? Whatever has a republi-crat NOT DONE which a demo-can HAS NOT?

The puppet masters "play" is served equally as well by both.

When clinton replaced bush, we were told great benefits would be on us. When bush replaced clinton, we were told great benefits would be on us. When obama replaced bush, once again, we were told great benefits are upon us. Indeed, until Kennedy, it has been but one long downhill run.

The problems are still all the same ... now fools start screaming a change of party is "going to bring great benefits."

I say, the rich will get richer, wall street and the shadow government will get stronger and eviler, people will begin dying from lack of medical care, illegal aliens will decorate the landscape, jobs will be overseas, etc. -- but, we WILL have an abundance of poverty and homelessness here. And, the new world order will march on ... while idiots and morons keep electing the same treasonous "crook type" which the elite populate our ballots with ...

To put it simply, until people take to the streets to take NO MORE, it will worsen and blacken ... fools, morons and idiots, ONLY, will find argument with the true altruism's above!

Well, actually, there wouldn't be much harm there, if done correctly.

Since about 80+% of the people fight over only ~7% of the money, we would have to tax the rich. This would be the solution for awhile, until they no longer had the money to pay them.

It is obvious, any new taxes on those stricken with poverty, living paycheck-to-paycheck, they will simply fail and be forced on welfare--which the rich will also have to pick up the tab on--so, those rich are going to start running out of money in pretty short order ... but hey, it will work for awhile.

Indeed, the above will force the people into the street in open rebellion a lot sooner ... it might be a way to shorten the length of time we are stuck in this whole mess ... I mean, it just might work--hungry people get pretty desperate and mean ...

I should point out, I have always had a handgun around and never could imagine I would ever see a time I would have to use it. A few months ago I took the old military .45 in and traded it, with some cash, for a new 9mm auto on a titanium frame for me and a little .32 auto on an aluminum frame for the wife. Sent her through a training course, and we both now carry ... times have changed ...

I don't think the (or a church) has ever committed child abuse/molestation/etc. It is always done by individuals. Same way the schools are not actively engaged in molesting children, it is done by individual teachers ... perhaps a group of them can get together to perform their perversions ... who knows?

I can see how you would naturally pose such a question though.
Homosexuals just seem naturally driven towards child molestation ... but I think such behavior is pretty much specific to the mental disease of homosexual-ism. And, relate are those bizarre trans-genitalia groups ...

Used the full Agent since the beta days. I think I started using Agent when it was Version 0.97. Recently updated to version 6 and have no issues. Works similarly to a program we used at the office back in the mid nineties so I have always been comfortable with the way it operates.
Can't see any reason to change now. My only real gripe is that there is no version for my Mac.

The democrats have had a majority in the house and the senate since Jan, 2007.
This is when the economy started it's dive. Note: Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac were pushed by Barney Frank and Chris Dodd and this started the snowball rolling.

Most of them are distancing themselves from Obama and healthcare and they don't even say they are democrats in most of their ads, or government

Your problem is you see everything in the immediate. By the time you notice something "starts its' dive" bad policy and people have been at work a decade to cause it!

The truth is, NOTHING has gotten better since the 1960's, each year it only worsens. However, the top 10% or at least 5% of the population have never had it so good ... they are certainly NOT for changing anything, except to worsen it for the rest of us. And, the 1% richest-elite are drowning in the money which has been stolen from the other 90% of the population ...

When you see them standing beside or behind Ron Paul, begin to take them seriously--it will be the first time they have been honestly sincere.

Yup, on this we agree...

1) Put out the fire.

2) Next day, send them a bill for the 75 bucks.

3) If they ignore the bill, take them to Small Claims Court.

4) If all else fails, put the equivalent of a "Mechanic's Lien" against the house.

Not rocket science and one hell of a lot better than standing there watching it burn to the ground. Their stupidity is stupendous...and who ever was in power that told the firemen to do nothing but watch should be in jail for terminal stupidity.

What are you talking about, I'm lower middle or middle class and I have a house,
4 vehicles, 3 tv's, 3 vcr's, a daughter in college, my 16 yr old son drives a Lexus, it's a 98 but it's beautiful and in great condition. I have radios, I have a work bench with a scope and all the test equipment I need for now. I have 2 computers, my son has a XBOX360, PS3 and a Wii. (Need to sell the PS3 and Wii, don't get much use.)
We have a riding lawn mower, an electric gokart, a storage shed for both. I have a shed for my tools and to work in. My wife has a shed for her stuff. We have a washer and dryer, heat and air conditioning. Indoor plumbing :-)

I have health insurance that I'm comfortable with, and a Health Savings Account
that seems to work well, everyone should have one, that would lower healthcare costs.
I suspect Obamacare will screw up my health insurance before it's over.
What more should I want?
I have enough money saved to live very frugally the rest of my life.
Ya, I watched my house go from $83,000 to $260,000 and back down to under $150,000.
All caused by bad government policy.
I could go on, but you get the point, if you want get ahead in America the opportunity is here.
I do expect to continue saving* another 10 years or so to make retirement more comfortable. I'm 55 so I think I might get in on the SS ponzy scheme, but you youngsters should expect it to change drastically.
I don't have any debt except insurance and taxes.
This is a wonderful place to live if you live under your means and try to get ahead rather than digging yourself into debt. Everything is available, it is an amazing place. I'm pretty much agnostic, but God Bless America.
I think I hear the Star Spangled Banner Playing.

Fire was outside the City Limits in the County Area.

The Firemen were City Employees following the Laws and Rules of the Mayor and City Council.

So don't fault the Firemen : Fault the City's Management.

The 'City' should have an alternative to doing NOTHING.
-example- Don't Pay the $75 Fire Services Fee in the County : Sign an On-the-Spot for a 1% 'City Lien' on Your Property.
$100K Property Value =$1K Lien
$250K Property Value =$2.5K Lien

Sends the Message : PAY THE FIRE SERVIES FEE [.]

Well, congratulations on owning a bunch of chinese junk, if you like that sort of stuff, sounds like you are set ... I'd think in the near future that house will hit 83K again, don't worry ... you are not doing as well as my family, but then we always knew to own our own businesses to fall back on. Of course, I only own one SUV and the wife has a tiny town car ... I don't like a bunch of chinese junk laying around ... but electronics is the downfall of the wife and me. Since it is all plastic-chinese junk now, we think of it as just having "backups."

I don't know how much of a cushion you have, but it might save you if you settle in the right area--good neighbors in a country setting close to a clean dependable water supply--our vacation home doubles as our bomb shelter and safe house ... I'd suggest plenty of guns, secure shelter, food, medicine, gold and not necessarily in that order ... a home in the city/suburbs is just something you are going to have to dump.

I pity those who either cannot or will not be prepared ... but then, I learned that in Boy Scouts.

In my high school years, we lived in a small town, in the country. I used to take a .22 rifle to school with me, toss it in my locker, when school was out, go off shooting and exploring out gold mines, and such. I went hunting with my father ever since I was ten.

The wifes' family have always owned gun stores, and still do. So she pretty much grew up with a gun in her hand since childhood. And, nice to have the family able to supply us with many and discounted weapons. I am fond of automatics and have went a bit overboard in holding on to them. I once even owned a 50 caliber cannon ... try to find a place to shoot that nowadays!

Well, all that, and that IS the best reason for owning one--to make the "other guy give up his life" if he comes for yours, to protect yourself from an oppressive government, etc.

But, also a toy, like a car, motorcycle, etc. And, just as capable of great harm if not "played with" properly ...

The people who hire such as those firemen, and, of course, the firemen themselves, should have never been hired! The people we have employed as our public servants need to be given a good look-over and the ones who aren't capable of rational and sound decisions given leave--or even have charges brought against them.

Only recently have I seen such moronic behaviors. It does make you wonder what is happening ...

OK, I will present my challenge again (Thus far, all the conservatives have run from it).

First, temporal correlations are not strong at all. If you want anyone to believe your temporal correlation, you need to present some reason for them to do so.

So, this is your chance. Please list the bills that the Democratic majority got through the Senate that caused all of these problems.
Please concentrate on the time between Jan, 2007 and Jan, 2009, since that is when our economy went to hell in a handbasket. Now, please tell me how the Democrats in the Senate managed to persuade enough Republicans to overcome the inevitable filibuster. Then, please tell us how the Democrats were able to get 7 more Republicans to override the inevitable veto from President Bush. I expect you to name names of the Senators who voted for these apparently horrible bills, and to point out the bills they voted for.

MikeK, the floor is yours...

Liberty Net: October 2, 2010

http://3950.net/2010/10/liberty-net-october-2-2010/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

SHORTWAVE RADIO PROPAGATION went very long during this weekï¿½s Liberty Net, despite the higher sunspot numbers, but noise was extremely low and almost all stations, even the low power ones, were heard clearly. Remember, if you canï¿½t listen to the Liberty Net on or near 3950 kHz on Saturday nights at 10PM Eastern time, you can listen _any_ time right here on http://3950.net. You can even download the file for listening on your personal mp3 player.

Here are a few topics covered this time on amateur radioï¿½s Saturday night institution, the Liberty Net, on the air since 1974:

ï¿½ Paying the underclass parasites to breed and feed, and paying the military to conquer the Middle East for Israel, has cost us so much that every child now owes $42,000 on the national debt the instant he or she is born. If you count White children only ï¿½ the main ones who will pay this debt ï¿½ it is far, far more. (50 minutes)

ï¿½ China ï¿½ with its near-total control of its currency and the wages it pays its slave laborers ï¿½ has an effective labor monopoly and is using it to 1) put its manufacturing competitors out of business whenever it so chooses and 2) use the resultant profits to buy out resources and productive properties all over the planet. (57 minutes)

ï¿½ Are the recently announced ï¿½al-Qaeda terror targetsï¿½ in Europe just a phony threat created in order to deflect attention from the rape of the European economy by the bankers? (1 hour 9 minutes)

ï¿½ Has Rahm Emanuel been inserted into Chicago politics as a Zionist agent, presaging a staged terror event? (1 hour 13 minutes)

ï¿½ Patriots are calling for a thorough audit of the gold allegedly stored in Fort Knox, to include drilling out a portion of the ingots to ensure they have not been replaced by bars with tungsten cores. (1 hour 49 minutes)

ï¿½ Is the United States headed for a Weimar-style hyperinflation, at the height of which a pound of food cost forty boxcars-full of thousand-mark notes? (2 hours 19 minutes)

ï¿½ Do those in authority purposely recruit police officers with sub-100 IQs because they want obedient ï¿½enforcersï¿½ incapable of original thought or of doubting their superiors, and who will obey any order? (2 hours 24 minutes)

To listen online, just click on the link marked with an arrow to activate our streaming player, and then click anywhere on the grey progress bar to jump to any part of the recording, once the bar shows file transfer activity. You can also right-click on the ï¿½downloadï¿½ link (which appears when you start the player) to save the latest Liberty Net to your hard drive. Thanks to N2SAG and N2IRJ for making the Liberty Netï¿½s Web presence a reality, and thanks to Net Control Station W1WCR for running the most exciting net in amateur radio history.

Open your ballot, study it closely, now ask yourself, "Is any one of these candidates really going to improve my standard of living, my familys' standard, my friends?"

Ask yourself, "Are any of these propositions really going to change things for the better, cure any of the real underlying problems, bring prosperity back to America, improve jobs, health care, crime, etc."

Now, doesn't the question, "What the hell am I voting for?" Sound like the only intelligent question? And, "Why is somebody saying that?"

Is there a reason the Democrats are attacking Republicans for personal issues rather than running on your Democrat policy records.

Did Democrats come up short on successful legislation to brag about or is it just that you have no successful policies......

How's that Border problem panning out for your Democrats? How's that TAX plan working, is VAT a big hit or is the Carbon tax taking-off for you.

I suppose the Obamacare thing could have gone better too..... But the Trillion dollar bailout plan is one you need to use on all your note getting escapades.

I think Firemen need muscles of iron, nerves of steel and hearts of gold. If any of those things is missing, they probably ought not be firemen.

No moreso than any other group, Gays just get more press when they do it because its so sensational. Plenty of "straight" molestation too.

A lot was done? Well, let me see, trillions were given to billionaires, that is the same as has been happening ... the amount is staggering though.

The rich-rip-off insurance corps have been guaranteed clients ... a new twist in how that is being done.

Tax breaks have been guaranteed for the richest of the rich ... that is pretty old news ...

No, I can't say a lot has been done here ... indeed, the landscape looks pretty much the same, except for a bunch more losing their retirement, homes, wealth, etc.

I wouldn't say "a lot" has been done ... indeed, if I didn't know a demo-can was in office, I'd have thought it was a republi-crat!

We can see that you don't actually have a clear definition of any of the terms you are using, This is most especially true of "fascism". I suggest that you get the proper definition of fascism from the horses mouth, so to speak:

http://www.fordham.edu/halsall/mod/mussolini-fascism.html

One of the things that stands out very clearly is that fascism and socialism are polar opposites.

> Fascist are Defined as NATIONAL Socialist Communist are Defined as > Inter-National Socialist -what-separates-them-is- Nationalism {Fascist}
> Socialism and Internationalism {Communists} Socialism is "INTER"

What separates fascism from socialism is its elevation of the state (and a state religion) above the people. In true socialism the state manages the resources on the part of the people. That would be the case in either "democratic socialism" OR Marxian socialism. The difference in these two contenders is the insistence of the Marxists that the managing entity called the state must be installed by forcible overthrowing the current oligarchy. All the crap about worldwide versus nation states is exactly that: crap. Communism is anarchy in its proposed form and that state of being is a myth such as a unicorn. Some power will arise to enforce the ideals of communism in spite of anything the people might want. And none of this crap has anything at all to do with social democracy which is capitalism with a rational welfare state.

Well put, but sadly when discussing this with social conservatives, we are dealing with the victims of 40 years of intensive right wing propaganda which taught people to equate any degree of democratic socialism with totalitarian communism and dictatorship. The conservative lemmings were taught socialism is evil, period. There are no degrees of democratic socialism in a libertarian capitalist business environment whatsoever according to them. Amusingly, they will decry the evil socialist machine just after taking a nice safe drive on our evil socialist interstate road system. And the whole thing with this ludicrous "liberal fascism" is yet more propaganda attempting to equate everything evil in the world with socialism, even fascism. The right wing cannot admit Hitler and the fascists are part of them, so they attempt to make them out as leftist. Sadly, the lemmings believe it. And they see any attempt to explain reason to them as part of the evil leftist plot to unplug granny and force good white Christian people into sharing healthcare with their inferiors.

No, I'm not, but then again I AM says that man who is a priest is the problem, and not the priest who is a man.

Vice President Joe "Bite-Me" Biden got a laugh[?] from his audience at a Wisconsin fundraising event Thursday when he tried to rile the crowd about the economic collapse of 2008.

“We want to reward people who manufacture things in the United States, in Wisconsin, not to take them overseas to China and to other countries!” he said to a silent room at the event for Democratic gubernatorial nominee Tom Barrett, according to a White House pool report.

He continued, saying, “You’re the dullest audience I’ve ever spoken to," at which point he got applause and laughs.

Another 0baMa0 Goof: U.S. companies making electric cars and batteries they hope to sell to China, Europe and other markets can’t do business abroad unless they make the products there.

“Can we export our batteries to China? The answer is no.” Last year, the Obama administration gave A123Systems $250 million to expand its battery manufacturing in the United States. Forcier said that to grow the battery industry in the United States, demand has to come from the U.S. “to create energy independence and jobs.” Neither, however, can be created to anywhere near the extent to fulfill the administration’s wishful thinking.

Electric vehicle battery plants are under construction in many locations. “Nearly every big-league automaker—and a whole bunch of smaller ones, including startups—has promised to start producing an electric car sometime in the next few years,” writes Yahoo.com Sept. 13. Billions of dollars are being spent—a lot of money and effort. “But every time I write about the coming wave of electric cars,” writes columnist John Rosevear, “I hear the same question over and over: Is anybody going to buy these things?”

J.D. Power & Associates, the industry authority, forecasts GLOBAL sales of electric cars at only 300,000 in 2015, with about HALF being MADE IN CHINA. A spokesman for the firm said calculation of sales of hybrid cars in 2015 is 280,000. The sales forecast for 2015 for electric cars—the plug-ins of Obama’s one million-car dream world is only 140,000. “That’s not even one percent of the number of other cars that will be on the roads in 2015,” he said.

Meanwhile, the green movement in Germany is questioning the supposed environmental benefits of electric cars. The German branch of the World Wildlife Foundation (WWF) discovered to their surprise that “carbon dioxide savings were so small,” according to WWF vehicle expert Viviane Raddatz. Germany, with 41 million cars now, hopes to have one million electric cars or hybrids by 2020. Raddatz said CO2 emissions would be cut by only 0.1 percent.

When ObaMa0 campaigned for the Presidency in 2008, he called for the ambitious goal of 1 million electric cars on our highways by 2015. When George W. Bush was in the White House, he saw hydrogen as the future energy of the auto industry. By last summer, however, Obama had laid out his goal for the country’s cars and trucks: They would come “with a plug,” Scientific American reported. The stimulus package provided $2.4 billion for development of plug-ins and the advanced batteries needed to power electric cars. At the same time, Obama chopped $100 million (60 percent) out of federal money intended for hydrogen cars. Soon to follow was the Energy Department’s handing out $25 billion in grants to aid car manufacturers and parts suppliers retool with the hope of making more green-efficient cars and trucks. Car manufacturers have long urged the government to avoid picking winners. They weren’t happy about the decision to slash funding for hydrogen production. But the government’s ownership stake in GM and Chrysler just might influence industry decisions.

Late last month, for the first time, a wanted student leader of the June 4th movement [1989 Tiananmen Square massacre - Beijing] was permitted to travel openly to China—under the wings of billionaire investor Warren Buffett.

On Sept. 27, 2010, Li Lu accompanied Buffett for the Chinese car manufacturer BYD Auto's annual business meeting in Shenzhen. Li, a student leader during the 1989 Tiananmen Square movement, was listed as wanted by authorities and later fled China. He now owns a successful Wall Street investment company.

Li, 44, a hedge-fund manager, assisted Buffett’s Berkshire Hathaway, Inc. to find profitable investments in China. In 2008 Buffett bought a ten percent share in BYD’s stock, investing US$230 million. Li is a relatively unknown fund manager whose investments bring a 26.4 percent annual return. Rumors have it that he may one day succeed Buffett.

This is not Li's first return to China, but it is his first overt one. According to the Hong Kong-based Apple Daily, the Central Propaganda Department has ordered the Chinese media not to videotape him.

An Exception to the Rule

Cheuk-yan Lee, deputy chair of the Hong Kong Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movements in China, believes the only reason for Beijing to let Li return to China is that the regime smells profit—his actually succeeding Buffet would enormously impact the future international financial market.

Over the past 21 years many democratic activists have applied to return to China, or tried to sneak in, without much luck. Wang Dan, another Tiananmen student leader now teaching in Taiwan, said that Li's public return to China does not represent a change in the regime's policy toward activists living in exile. Over the past 12 years, Wang has sought permission several times to return to China to visit family, but was refused.

Rev. Chu Yiu-Ming, who initiated the Home-Coming Movement, pointed out that at least 500 exile democratic activists are on Beijing's wanted list and cannot return to China.

Chu thinks many of them are still active in the pro-democratic movements and are thus prevented from returning openly. Most traveled back for business, and were forbidden to have anything to do with politic.

Not true. You need 60 votes to move anything in the Senate. The Democratics have not had 60 since Scott Brown was swore.
There are 420 bills passed by the house, stuck in the senate, due to Republican obstruction. Normal people are aware of this; bubble puppies are not.

People love the compnent parts of insurance reform just fine. When Suicide... which is "letting" a BUS run you over is against God's laws.

So letting someone gut you like a pig with a knife and you not trying to continue to live is suicide. It's giving up on life and that's suicide NOT passivism.

You omitted the military and our Republican wars....that's where the real

You also omitted the cheap tax rates we have for the benefits all Americans

More 60-80 lb backpacks of drugs are coming over than border than any other time in history. Illegals serve as mules for this purpose to get their first grubstake of money here ... most in law enforcement can tell you about this ... if they aren't involved in it, themselves! With the kind of money we are talking about, the financial lure just tends to be too much for many of them.

Take the profit out of drugs by killing our drug laws.
Tax and regulate the shit the way we do with alcohol and tobacco.

Results?

Fill up the treasury and empty out the jails. End drug crime...because there'll be no money in it.

Do the same with the IRS and TAX laws by amending the constitution and getting rid of income tax and replacing it with a NEW ITEM sales tax.

Growing Marijuana may be a help to the JOB market.

Reducing regulations is primary since regulation is what stifles commerce, the more regulations, the more it costs our economy. Most regulations are used by existing businesses to reduce competition, and competition would help us get out of this depression.

End the "war on drugs" make them legal(increase competition) and sold at any drug store and push for prostitution to be legal too, that will take the BIG money out of trafficking in drugs, and that will reduce the gangs/dealers income and that should reduce the value of sex slaves and hurt the human trafficking business income also. Why have illegal prostitutes when there are so many legal tax paying prostitutes out there?
http://revolutionarypolitics.tv/video/viewVideo.php?video_id=12541&title=portugal-legalize
s-drugs--crime-usage-falls

Create Bi-color money, Red money for inside the USA and Original Green money outside the USA..... NOTHING BUT A COLOR/INK difference, and suddenly sending red money home to Mexico would be useless as the RED money would be useless in Mexico since the Banks and etc wouldn't accept it abroad. All electronic money leaving the USA would be debited the Sales tax when the money is sent/spent.

The Drug dealers would have Red money that they need to exchange for green money, makes it hard to do in large amounts and hard to spend and more expensive to deal withï¿½.. that makes Drug smuggling less profitable as would dropping the income tax and installing a NATIONAL ï¿½NEW ITEMï¿½ SALES TAX NOT IMPLEMENTING A VAT TAX WHICH WILL HELP THE DRUG DEALERS and illegals by making their tax free money leaving the country even more valuable. If they had to buy/exchange the RED money for GREEN money then you would charge the sales tax at that point.

Have the States Ratify an amendment withdrawing the 16th amendment... Maybe enact something similar to the http://fairtax.org (Federal sales tax) BUT NOT A VAT or VALUE ADDED TAX with the same amendment that removes income tax and the IRS, preferably a Federal NEW ITEM sales tax.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=S7AgwtSzxt8

This will reduce the number of tax crimes that people are in jails for and it will give the people back their privacy. It will also promote GREEN living where people will save more and waste less and buy second hand and wear things out rather than discard and buy new. Then add to the amendment that if congress raises tax by 1% they are forced to cut every single expenditure of the government by 3%.

Begin to draw down troops as needed from around the world. Put half of our military bases along the southern Border to minimize the amount of border that the Border patrol needs to watch, the military and Federal trespassing laws will push the illegals to spaces between the military bases.

This tax/border policy will financially assault the drug dealers and hookers and other underground economy's by forcing them to have to pay tax when they spend their money , which will further reduce the benefit of dealing in other illegal stuff. There needs to be one type of dollar for use inside America and one type(color) of dollars for use outside the USA. That will make it harder for smugglers to get money out of the country and if they do spend it here then they will pay the sales tax and that money is used to enforce the laws to catch smugglers. We are "right now" taking money from peoples pay checks before they get them and at the same time we don't tax drug dealers or hookers and illegals or others at all, we are penalizing the working Americans and giving a bonus to illegal activity. Sales tax will also encourage saving money rather than encouraging the leveraging of every dime you can borrow like income tax does.

This will drive people in the underground economy to become part of the real economy. It will stop most of the turf killings and end our immigration problems with illegals stealing identities since they will be paying tax(as sales tax). Offer illegals less welfare and charge them tax and they won't be so eager to come here and we won't need to chase them......

End Social Security/Medicare, grandfather it out of existence.

Pass an amendment to the constitution that makes all laws_and_treaties have a seven year sunset clause, and it requires that each law/treaty be voted by a separate roll call vote every seven years to continue to be maintained in our laws.

There should also be some constitutional amendments to stifle congress' borrowing and spending making it more difficult for that process. And a constitutional amendment to limit the Interstate Commerce Clause. The politicians use that clause to justify all sorts of socialist crap. The founding fathers never meant for it to be so broadly applied. Limit it with an amendment, so government can't justify every crazy idea by saying its legal under the interstate commerce clause.

Pass another amendment creating term limits on congress so the House has 6 terms and the Senate has 2 terms, for a total of 12 years in either side of congress. WE NEED TO STOP CONGRESS FROM PASSING FRIVOLOUS LAWS TAXES AND BORROWING AND ENDLESSLY PRINTING MONEY.

To quit filling the jails with people over social taboos , we need to take away congress' ability to "social engineer" businesses or private people by removing the governments use of tax code to manipulate people.

Government needs to spend 10% less every year until they meet the income of the government. The best way, is to use_both_cutting_and_taxing , the Congress should implement a rule to force an across the board spending freeze and then across the board cuts on the government spending, to do that we have to include a law in our TAX amendment to the constitution that can't be easily circumvented, to force them to cut spending 3% for every 1% Congress raise taxes. So any federal sales tax increase would result in automatic spending cuts using a baseline of 10% taxes.

And we need to give up our roll as the police man of the world, let them fight their own fights. We also need fewer crimes for people to be committing, we need fewer police and prisons to support.... the above drug and tax plan, will reduce police and prison needs by at least that 10% that this plan suggested cutting each year.

NO welfare to corporations, and cut welfare to private people by 10% each year until it is 10% of today's cost. Any way you look at it, we're in DEEP for a long time.

NOTHING in the Constitution gives government the right to regulate plants which God placed on the earth. It is the height of abuse, control, illegal actions, etc. for any government to claim rights above God ... ignorance is the only reason we now find ourselves in all this crime and corruption ... perhaps, the feds could legitimately tax drugs going over state lines, but that is the extent of any legal authority they could ever argue.

Unfortunately, if we are to allow the illegal aliens and the export of jobs overseas, the money in the few remaining hands will be forced to support all of America. That simply can't be cut without bloodshed and the outright destruction of society. If the funds become unavailable to support society, then the society falls ... but then, in looking at what is happening, certainly more than myself must suspect this may be the ultimate plan ... frankly, I'd like to skip the hunger and poverty which causes outright murder in the streets from occurring!

Low taxes benefit the government since the more the economy grows the more money comes into the government, and the more jobs for people.

Cutting the military is NOT a bad idea if done intelligently, for instance cutting NATO out of the Budget totally is a great idea.

Stop any military assistance/intelligence to the UN.

Bring troops home to bases built along OUR SOUTHERN BORDER, so we don't need to hire more border patrol officers.

Voters get the politicians they deserve if they vote like a foolish bunch of ignorant sheep against their own best interests because of some stupid talking points trumpeted by Rove, Beck and Limbaugh. The wars that helped bankrupt the US happened on Bush's watch. The deregulation of Wall Street that also helped bankrupt the US also happened on Bush and the GOP's watch. The majority of the American jobs that got shipped overseas and the death of manufacturing all happened on Bush/Cheney and the GOP's watch. If you are stupid enough to vote your way back to that dark era, go ahead, be my guest.

It seems a bit like cutting our redwood forest, when they try to eliminate a naturally growing marijuana weed. It is equivalent to our government going out and clubbing baby seals to keep us all safe from seals, since they are destroying Marijuana plants just to make us safe.

Oh, it is much, much worse than that. If drug addicts are left alone, they usually only harm themselves or those who are willingly involved with them.

With the government involved, and inflating the cost of drugs, the drug addicts are committing crimes to get the money to afford their drugs. They take a gun into a liquor store and make a "withdrawal" to get their drugs. Or, they are down on a corner at your local school attempting to sell drugs to kids to get the money to buy drugs. Or, they are importing drugs, and exporting our money, to foreign countries to get their drugs.

If you look at the whole picture, I'd say about 90% of all the dangers associated with drugs, for the normal population, are created by government itself! Up until the turn of the 1900's all drugs were "legal." Some people became unwittingly addicted because these addictive drugs were in medicines and foods they consumed and they were not aware of it. So, government decided to save us all and make the drugs illegal ... and now we are where we are at.

Educate people and legalize drugs ... there simply is not another sane path to take.

JS

If the billions, and most likely trillions, were spent here instead of in foreign countries, making them rich and us impoverished, it would sure help the situation here! Legalizing drugs would have a positive effect. In the countries where drugs are legal, these problems we have are almost non-existent ... greatest kept secret, from the American people, I have ever seen.

Yes there is a History of Child Abuse/Exploitation/Molestation
by 'The Church' and Churches in general : Which also reflects
the same History of Child Abuse/Exploitation/Molestation in the greater-society as a whole.

Some of this Abuse/Exploitation/Molestation is Hetrosexual Pedophile by Adult Males upon underage Girls : Both in the larger society and the churches.
-imho- Whether in Society or the Church these Adult Males
are Criminals.

Some of this Abuse/Exploitation/Molestation is Homosexual Pedophile {NAMBLA} by Adult Males upon underage Boys :
Both in the larger society and the churches.
-imho- Whether in Society or the Church these Adult Males
are Criminals.

Remember that when you are Condemming 'The Church'
you are also Condemming Society as a whole . . .

Oops You Yourself are a Member of Society and
-and- Yes You Are Condemming Yourself . . .

Which Part of Man {Adult Male} & Boy {Child Male} Love
NAMBLA - Do You Not Understand To Be Child Molestation ?

A government, of Israel, by Israel, and, for: Israel.
But all things that are reproved are made manifest by the light:
for whatsoever doth make manifest is light. The light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not. The light of the body is the eye:
if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.
But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness.
If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!
Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

A second thought . . .

What did their Fire Insurance Company 'do' after the Fire . . .

Hand them back their Insurance Premium :
Because they did not Subscribe to the City's Fire Services Fee and maintain Fire Coverage
-or- Pay the Fire Damage Claim ?

- - Homosexuals just seem naturally driven
- - towards child molestation ...

Not more than the general population; and usually it is a Repetition of "The Cycle of Abuse" that they themselves experience. But that too can be said for Heterosexual Pedophiles often they themselves were abused in some form or fashion; not necessarily sexually but abused nevertheless.

- No moreso than any other group,
- Gays just get more press when they do
- it because its so sensational.

Same could be said of "The Church"
-and- "The Church" has lots of money, property and wealth for Lawyers to Sue on behalf of their Clients
{The Victims}

The Mass Media loves a good Church Bashing lead story and it it has a Multi-Million Dollar Lawsuit with a Big MM Pay-Out it's a Media Frenzy JACK-POT !

- Plenty of "straight" molestation too.
- All disgusting, though.

Worth Repeating :
There is a History of Child Abuse/Exploitation/Molestation
by 'The Church' and Churches in general : Which also reflects
the same History of Child Abuse/Exploitation/Molestation in the greater-society as a whole. Most likely the relative percentages in both groups may be the same.
-ergo- The Church {Churches} are NO better and NO worse than Society as a whole -and- Society as a whole is . . .

Actually since Homosexuals as a Group are a smaller part of the greater-society then Heterosexuals the numbers for Homosexual Pedophiles may be smaller than for the Heterosexual Pedophiles -but- the relative percentages in both groups may be the same.

Don't Know of Any 'Church' that Actively Supports a NAMBLA Chapter as part of it Ministry . . .

Most likely

Dissolution of the Netherlands Antilles will take place on 10 October 2010. After this date Bonaire, Saba and St Eustatius will become special municipalities of the Netherlands, and will have to apply most Dutch law, while Curaï¿½ao and St Maarten will become constituent states within the Kingdom of the Netherlands along the lines of Aruba, which broke away from the Netherlands Antilles in 1986.

You are forgetting something here. They were following orders from the city Mayor - their boss. Who, just happens to be a republican and belivees what he did was right. I wanna know what happened to the county property taxes. I'm sure they have them. Doesn't the county itself have an obligation to contract with the surrounding cities for protection if they aren't going to provide it? Volunteer firestations are not really that expensive. The one I was at for a while in Florida received hand me down trucks from the Forrestry Department at no cost provided we returned them when we didn't need them anymore. It provided us with the trucks we needed to run the department. The city only had to provide the insurance and turn-out gear - and of course, the building. But I'm sure the county down there has plenty of property they could utilize for a fire station and such.

The blame is on the city Mayor and the County Trustees equally. And I heard this family's insurance company is refusing to pay the claim now as well. A lot of good it did to pay them all those years.

Republicans typically have no compassion for anyone else - only themselves.

Next time I go down town, (I haven't been down town in about three years and that was when I went down town to buy a license plate for my 1983 Dodge van I bought about three years ago, there is nothing down town I care about, I may never go down town again.Screw that!) I might amble around to that street (that street is in an area I really don't care to go to, if you get me drift?) and see if that old dusty 1960's British convertible sports car is still sitting in that garage by that old house over there.

Nope. The problem didn't start until about the 1950's-1970's and began a rapid decline in the 1980's.

I doubt they will fare any better. The looter class will enjoy the gridlock. Returning vets with big monkeys and no morals will add a delightful touch of the old west.

Caesar took so much, that Rome didn't survive it.

There is group on the web, they have spy cams placed all along the borders in high traffic areas. You can actually sit their and count the backpacks of drugs entering the US. It is funny to watch the little indians struggle under the crushing weight of the drugs! I will try to find that page and post it here ... should clear up any myths about it being hard to smuggle anything in here. The amount of illegals crossing with the drugs is staggering also ... if anyone stumbles across that page, please post it here ... I forgot to bookmark it or even which friend showed it to me ... I will be looking. I'd love to shut these jack-arses up!

- Most adjacent districts have reciprocal agreements
- to help each other out.

"The City" does NOT have any "Reciprocal Agreement" with the County; because the County does NOT have a Fire Department {Fire Services District} for this Un-Incorporated Area :
* This is the Counties Fault -Not- "The City's"
* This is the Citizens/Residents of the Un-Incorporated Area's Fault -Not- "The City's"

What "The City" Did Do Was Offer to the Citizens/
Residents of the Un-Incorporated Area's a Fire

Services Fee of $75 Annually* : Which this County Citizens/Residents 'choose' NOT TO PAY [.]
* A Subscription "Reciprocal Agreement"

- No self-respecting fire chief would have done
- what this jerk did.

Let's see the Fire Chief Fights the Fire and one of his Firemen gets Injured or some major Fire Equipment gets damaged.

The Mayor and City Council FIRE the Fire Chief for 'Cause' for Failing to follow their Laws and Rules.

Again Wondering . . . What Did The Home Owners
Fire Insurance Company 'do' after the Fire . . .

Marcy Kaptur along with Dennis Kucinich is a member of the communist Progressive Caucus in the House of Representatives whose website was hosted by the Democratic Socialists of America.

[David Kucinich has had close ties to Communist Party USA (CPUSA) members since the 1960s. According to the World Socialist Web Site, Kucinich, during his years as mayor of Cleveland, "was closely allied with the Stalinists of the CPUSA."]

Americans for Democratic Action rates her voting record as 85 to 95 percent on the left side of legislation.

During her congressional career, Marcy Kaptur has voted:

against the continuation of U.S. aid to the Contra rebels who were fighting against the Soviet-backed, Castro-trained, Marxist Sandinista dictatorship of Nicaragua in the 1980s;

against the development of a national missile defense system;

against the Anti-Terrorism Act of 2001; against allowing the U.S. government to use electronic surveillance to investigate suspected terrorist operatives;

against a bill permitting the government to combat potential terrorist threats by monitoring foreign electronic communications which are routed through the United States; against the establishment of military commissions to try enemy combatants captured in the war on terror;

in favor of a proposal to expedite the transfer of all prisoners in the Guantanamo Bay detention center; against requiring hospitals to report (to the federal government) illegal aliens who receive emergency medical treatment;

against the Real ID Act, which proposed to set minimal security requirements for state driver licenses and identification cards;

against a bill calling for the construction of some 700 miles of fencing to prevent illegal immigration along America's southern border;

against major tax cut proposals in September 1998, February 2000, March 2000, May 2001, May 2003, and May 2006;

against separate welfare reform bills designed to move people off the welfare rolls and into paying jobs;

and in favor of prohibiting oil and gas exploration in Alaska’s Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR).

One of Kaptur's largest campaign contributors has been the American Association for Justice, a trial lawyer organization that supports its members in lawsuits against American businesses and is a member of an which seeks to keep conservative and moderate Democrats in check.

This goes to the very heart of why a private organization should never be hired to provide an essential service more properly rendered by a government agency. Private companies are mercenary and cannot be trusted to do the right thing when the need arises, because money speaks louder than either decency or duty. If a town or city hires for this kind of work, the contract must be done right or else the job will be done wrong. This issue NEVER should have arisen at all - if the guy did not pay his bill for services, a lien should have been placed on his house and the money should haver been collected so that there could have been no excuse. Not fighting the fire could have resulted in a disaster worse than fighting it. IMHO, there is plenty of blame to go around here, and I would not be surprised if this winds up in court and that blame is apportioned among many players.

The gov't pays 'only $7800' per each rifle for an 'upgrade'. Just shows how the paper money has depreciated over the years.

Constantine was one of the first Christian emperors that established it as a state religion. The country was called Eastern Roman Empire.

Both Rome and Jerusalem are alive . But not the Temple,unfortunately.
The Moslems claim it as their domain.

- Roy knows better.
- He lives in fire country.
- He's just being a Fisk Hole.

Yes 'Special Dave' I do reside in the "Red {Fire} Zone" and up here you need to know where your Fire Service is coming from depending upon where you reside.

1 - Twain Harte FD {Twain Harte Community Services District}
2 - CAL FIRE in Twain Harte {California State Dept Forestry}
3 - Tuolumne County FD [TCFD]
4 - Stanislaus National Forest Fire {US Dept Forestry} [FedFD]
5 + plus many more local Community Services Districts for Fire Services both Paid and/or Volunteer.

Because Twain Harte FD has a 'Town' Level Fire Dept.
The Fire Insurance Costs* for Residences in Twain Harte are way less then some areas in the County and Forest Lands that only have TCFD County and/or National Forest FedFD Fire Services.
* One Dollar in County Property Taxes for a House in Twain Harte Saves Two Dollars in Fire Insurance Costs.
Plus the THFD usually responds fast enough that your whole House does not Burn Down or Your Neighbor's House Fire does not end-up Burning Down your House too.
-If- were relied on the Tuolumne County FD it would be a 10~15~20 Minute wait before the TCFD would be on the scene; and most likely the House would be totalled.

But all of these FDs have Rules and Procedures that govern their "Mutual Aid" Agreements : None of the Community Locals would cross into another County or Federal Lands without a County Level or CAL FIRE Request/Authorization.

IIRC - Each and Every of the Community Local's "Mutual Aid" Responses is reviewed by their FD Boards for proper procedural compliance. All the Local Officers "Chiefs" know this and Follow-the-Rules. They do not put their Men and Equipment AT RISK {and Their Own Job At Risk} by breaking the rules and not following procedures.

FWIW - Each and Every one of the Mutual Aid Responses usually requires one to two or more back-up movements of Men and Equipment to adjust and fill-in for the Mutual Aid responding Men and Equipment. {Reallocation Limited Resources etc etc etc}

derived the German title Kaiser).

Actually, that is a terrible list of tragedy and destruction. SSI was set up correctly, and would be running with a surplus ... if the money hadn't been stolen and a bunch of IOU's replacing the funds. My drugs are not safe and the vaccines are downright poisonous. Crime has never been higher nor the murder rate higher. The libraries have been gutted and they keep reselling them to me, after they reassign the last funds I have given them into some "general fund." The water is all polluted with the drugs coming from urine upstream. The internet was "given" to us when the military was done with it... the automobiles are all ugly, I can't tell one from another, they are small and frankly, I doubt their "safety." I could list all the others and the problems with considering them "a great benefit" to me ... but then, I think you can do that as well as I ... most likely.

Produces while Cheapening Imports.

that is Levied Equally on Domestic and Imported Good offer good Employment and Safe Work Places . . .

The News Papers and the MuckRackers did more to

Plus US Unions did more for the Private Sector Working Man then the Politicians and the US Federal Government.

JS,

Actually 'Special Dave was right that the Ethnicity

This is counterpoised to the USA and Canada as seeing themselves as mostly a Mixture of European Populated Intermarried Peoples* that happen to be located in North America; along with Argentina in South America.

* Often this is cited as what the Arabs see Israel

the result is a clash of national identities

Hey! Hey! Hey!

You leftist weenies will be overjoyed to learn that I'm living at your expense :-)

I found a 2003 Social Security Statement...

Paid in myself plus employer plus self-employed, totals $204,596.

So far I've received $217,060!

So in dollars, ignoring interest that could have been earned and inflation killing dollar value, I'm now on the leftist weenie's dime

After this exchange he came back and said, hey, I farther ahead than that, you paid for my hip replacement too! He's been collecting 6 years and could live another 10 yrs or more.
The system has great problems, in the past the solution has been, take more from the workers. So the -take- from the workers since the beginning has continually increased.
It hasn't doubled, hasn't quadrupled, it's not a 10 times increase, it isn't a 15 times increase, it's around a 19 times increase. This is an increase on an ever expanding base. The program always wants more. The youngsters can't continue to pay it.
I started that SS talk when I wrote;

The best line I read from a SS recipient:
"I sure hope all you young people live up to the bargain "I" made."

True...sad, but true. Blame BOTH parties for greed. Of course greed is "obviously" a new thing. It's not like there are records of greed going back to time immemorial.

> My drugs are not safe and the vaccines are downright poisonous.

Huh? Your (legal, prescription) drugs can't be that unsafe, as you are obviously still here to bitch about it. There are tens of thousands of prescription drugs and 98 or 99% of them have proven to be safe and effective. Vaccines "poisonous"? I dunno, a LOT of people have taken them and a LOT of people are still here to talk about it. Again, a very high percentage of people find them effective; a very small percentage have a bad reaction, occasionally (very occasionally), fatal.

Lemme be the first to tell you this: Life is not perfect. If it were perfect, you would be in heaven. And if you were in heaven, you would be dead. So quitcher bitchin'.

> Crime has never been higher nor the murder rate higher.

Mebbe, mebbe not. The population is larger, so is crime higher on a percentage basis? Higher compared to what? The bad old days of the "Wild West"? The 1930s gangster days?

> The libraries have been gutted and they keep reselling them to me,

Our libraries here are just fine, thank you very much. Sorry to hear that yours have been mismanaged.

> The water is all polluted with the drugs coming from urine upstream.

Yes, our society does need to find a better way to dispose of unused Rx drugs. But, a two-edged sword. Those drugs keep us living longer. Again, nothing is completely perfect.

> The internet was "given" to us when the military was done with it...

I don't know about "given"; "evolved" might be a better word. It's here for whatever reason and gives you a platform to bitch, so why are you complaining?

> ...the automobiles are all ugly, I can't tell one from another, they > are small and frankly, I doubt their "safety."

WTF are you talking about? You doubt their safety? Do you want to go flying through a non-safety glass windshield? Do you want to get skewered by an old fashioned steering column?

Cars are all ugly? What do you consider a pretty car? A 1951 Studebaker? A 1953 Nash? A Pacer?

Side note #1: A year ago, my cousin said the cars were ugly and blamed it on Obama. Only problem was, Obama was in office for only ONE year at the time -- and cars have a TWO to THREE year design cycle. But hey, blame Obama for ANYthing and EVERYthing, no matter what.

Side note #2: I'm driving a turbo GM Kappa...and I don't think it's ugly. Your -opinion- may vary.

Sadly, it looks like you have crossed the line from being a cantankerous curmudgeon to being a world class whiner. Lighten up, you'll live longer. Oh, sorry, I forgot. You want perfection and are in a hurry to get to heaven...

Bwahahahahaha...

I'm impressed. Your input has no equal for such a concise, articulate

All the Mutual Aid is Highly Coordinated by the FDs to ensure that there is Adequate Fire Coverage at all times

NO City, Town or Special Fired District wants to have

- Huh? Your (legal, prescription) drugs can't be that unsafe, as you are
- obviously still here to bitch about it. There are tens of thousands of
- prescription drugs and 98 or 99% of them have proven to be safe and
- effective. Vaccines "poisonous"? I dunno, a LOT of people have taken
- them and a LOT of people are still here to talk about it. Again, a - very high percentage of people find them effective; a very small
- percentage have a bad reaction, occasionally (very occasionally), fatal.

-wrt- Prescription Drugs are 99.73% Pure "As Advertised" as to what they chemically are.

Now Prescription Drugs may be Toxic to You or have Side-Effects -but- They are Pure and unadulterated with other foreign materials like illegal street drugs usually do.

Marcy Kaptur appeared in the Michael Moore movie about the evils of capitalism (Bernie Sanders, the only self-described socialist elected to Senate, was one of the few other politicians featured) and often finds common cause with fellow Ohioan Rep. Dennis Kucinich.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=899

Michael Moore has become one of Kaptur’s biggest fans since interviewing her for his film.
“I'm going to have a thing on my website with Marcy Kaptur".

Marcy Kaptur steals the show in Michael Moore’s movie;
http://www.michaelmoore.com/search/?q=Kaptur

Kaptur votes as a rank-and-file Democrat most of the time.
She was listed by Nation magazine in its “Most Valuable Progressives” awards as the “Most Valuable House Member” in 2008.
The most valuable communist Useful Idiot.

"The Nation" magazine is the oldest and most leftwing of all popular American weekly magazines. The Nation supported the Russian Revolution and was first U.S. magazine to publish the Soviet Constitution. It opposed America's Cold War policies after World War II and generally supported the Communist bloc. Pity that Kaptur didn't learn the communist lessons from her Hungarian ancestry.

http://Hungary.GlobalMuseumOnCommunism.org

One of Kaptur's largest campaign contributors has been the American Trial Lawyers Association [now renamed the American Association for Justice due to the negative connotation of the words "trial lawyers"] The American Trial Lawyers Association was the largest PAC contributor to the Democratic Party in the last full political cycle. Over that same span, every law firm contributing over $1 million was a plaintiffs' firm, and each gave 99 to 100 percent of its contributions to Democrats."

Recent recipients of American Trial Lawyers Association AAJ-PAC campaign contributions include:

Make them put the money back in the SSI fund which they never should have taken out. It was used to finance the boat people from vietnam, pay their rent, buy 'em a car, provide food, medical, school, etc.

Now it is funding new immigrants, illegal aliens, etc. ... just put the money back and it will be in fine shape ... other areas of government will be deeply in debt and bankrupt though ...

Socialism was practised by the American Indians. The hunters went and gathered food, fought off the "bad guys", etc. The women gathered wood, prepared food, mended tents, etc.

The old hunters, and their wives, were taken care of in old age, having spent a lifetime protecting and caring for the tribe. Indeed, these practices were engaged by all peoples, on all continents, from the very beginning of our times ...

Now the crooks, charlatans, "capitalists", etc. come along and attempt to sell us the idea of making the rich, richer will "save us", fact is, it won't. But, it will do them a lot of good ... long as they can keep finding new ones, along the way, to give up their share so they can have "it better."

Same old, same old, each and every generation has to learn the hard way ... yawn.

Speak for yourself ... $20 of gold (an OZ.) still buys what it used to ... you'd have to trade me a bunch of those inflated $20 dollar bills to buy an OZ. of my gold ... but, I ain't sellin' it, yet ... wait until I can't trade the worthless fiat money for food, medicine, ammo, shelter, etc. ... we can probably strike a deal, then ...

Actually, property is money, gold is money, precious metals are money, food can be money, medicine can be money, water can be money, shelter can be money, etc. But, worthless paper printed with pretty pictures ain't ... it will get you a lot, in the world, to be able to recognize the difference.

Pretty decent reception here. Second half was better than the first in reception and content. Lots of plugs and info about the club during the first half and a little too much music. Second half was mainly recordings of the 2009 broadcast. I was more interested in the propagation from Europe to the west coast at that early hour.

Looking in a mirror again! This is the kind of shit that has ruined this group, once a good group for discussing radio, especially shortwave. You should take lessons from John Plimmer, a great DX'er, and even dxAce, who posts on-topic here. Take you lame shit elsewhere, and I don't mean St. Elsewhere.

Three (3) Phases To Liberal-Fascist Power : Ending in Total Fascist-Socialism©
http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.shortwave/msg/18424e411a0b81c1

1st -Socialist Unity- They Work With Liberals and Progressives to Eliminate their Common Political Opponents {Non-Socialists}

2nd -Socialist Purity- They Next Work To Eliminate
The Liberals and Progressives as being a socially corrupting influence preventing Social Progress.

At-this-Point : The Liberals has served their short term limited purpose in gaining Power. Plus the Liberals and other Socialist were viewed as being 'sympathetic' to the USSR; and thus an Internal Security Risk to the NAZI Party's Power and Control of 'The State' and the War.

The 'Conservative' Business Interests were still needed and necessary for the War*. Had the NAZI's Won the War : Then some/many of the 'Conservative' Business Interests would have been 'consolidated' under direct Party Control and 'The Expendable' expended.

3rd -Socialist Totality- One Party Rule : Of 'The Party' & By 'The Party' & For 'The Party'
-result- Total Fascist-Socialism passer-buy walks into shop and cuts customers throat with a knife.

Then next thing he trys to stab guy behind counter. A fight starts then a cow-orker comes out to help. guy behind counter pulls out big gun and shoots victim who falls to ground with horrific injuerys. Now this guy behind the counter was concluisvly shown in the video to have a gun ready to assualt somebody. He was ALREADY really and willing to fire a gun point-blank into another human. in other words the guy was looking for a EXCUSE to fire a gun at another human; probably even chose his career to increase the liklihood that he could be in a situation where he could hopt to get away with shooting someone. our laws dont cover loopholes like these and so why I fully support greater gun control measures.

No Brenda. Sorry, should have stated it differently. The money has become so worthless, a $20 dollar bill will NO LONGER buy $20 dollars of gold ... it takes ~$1,400 of the worthless bill to do so ... but, the $20 bucks of gold will still buy what it did in 1849 ... the dollars won't ... of course ...

I agree!

A Phoenix police officer told a store owner that he should shoot to kill rather than wounding the trash that kept trying to kill him, and robbing his store. That is defense of your private property.

The twisted thinking of the Australian OP comes from living in a country defending itself with knives. Notice that he does not mention the horrific picture of the person with the cut throat.Thank GOD he

Yes, guns in the hands of the people who will only shoot criminals, muggers, rapists, thieves, murders, child molesters, etc. are a very goo thing. The reason we have all the problems today is a build up from having neglected in removing these dangerous people from society. They have bred and taught their off spring the same dangerous and despicable ways ... it can't go on forever ... however, their are many fools who can't even leave their homes at night which don't realize the importance of placing guns in the hands of people which would make these places safe again ...

sad, so very, very sad ...

I agree. And, I have been one in major neglect of greater gun control. Take the 9mm I carry in a shoulder holster, under my left arm. When I pick up heavy packages/bags the gun "bites" into my arm and chest ... so, I am thinking, a smaller one, like my wifes .32 auto she carries in her purse would give me control over this pain!

It would fit in a pocket, shirt, pants, front, back, jacket ... darn, the little thing practically disappears in the palm of my hand! I am an excellent shot, I think it would do and I can dump the BIG 9mm and get greater control ... but, just a thought!

An ounce of gold today, when the price is adjusted for inflation, is worth less than it was in the 1970s. As for the rest, it's the survivalist's day-dream. By the way, when you're starving you can't eat gold. One old Vietnamese told of how it was in '54 when he was following the trails and roads south to run away from the Communists. At the low point in the trip, rice was traded for equal weight in gold. He only survived because he had a enough body fat to keep him going. Others simply died on the road.

No, money is money. The rest of your list are commodities or real estate or just things. The entire world is structured around the acceptance of money. That's not going to change. All the people with power require it, and, of course, all the economies of organized countries operate with money. Treasury notes (the cash in your pocket) is money, as are Treasury bonds and bills. To a lesser extent banker's acceptances and commercial paper are a form of money, too. The world has been operating very well on this basis since the 1940s.

When you are looking for a place to keep money for awhile, gold is it. Bury paper dollars and it just don't work. People who live paycheck-to-paycheck just don't get the concept. They have never had wealth and are not familiar with the problems of storing it, safely, for any extended length of time.

Trust me, there has never been a time when gold is difficult to trade for food, shelter, weapons, ammo, sex, you-name-it. I think these boys have been smokin' too much dope or lived in poverty too long!

Check history if you doubt me ... today, even, it is a great commodity to possess ... trade it for near anything you can imagine!

You forgot something, didn't you? Something important?

What did those without the weight of gold to trade for rice eat? Shoe leather?

But that is what I am talking about. If it gets that bad, make sure you have enough gold to be able to eat rice! ROFLOL

Actually without a gun a bullet can't kill anyone. And without a bullet a gun can only be used to clobber you to death.

Not in a total blockade,like happened in Biafra,Leningrad and many other times during military conflicts . Food runs out pretty quickly, sometimes within a few weeks . Singapore officially fell in WW2 due to water supply cutoff, and they had lots of food and ammo.

You, and the original poster, omitted to mention that the training in question comes with a 2 year stint in the military services from age 20 as well as ongoing training updates at regular intervals afterwards. The focus isn't on gun training so much as defence of Switzerland in time of war. A country with a gun in every house and every able bodied male able to use such guns make Switzerland a less desirable attack target.

Despite the famous scene from "Crocodile Dundee," carrying a knife around is illegal in many parts of Australia. I'm not certain whether it's a nationwide law, but I do know that it's illegal in large Australian cities.

Shoots victim are you stupid.

The guy cut the throat of one man and attacked two other people before being shot. He was the cause of the whole incident without his attack he would not have been shot.

Whit your ignorance you can claim all cops are ready and willing to find an excuse to kill someone too.

Basically, this is exactly what the United States is. It's not just a name, you know. All of the individual states were once individual political systems of their own. Our Federal government is basically just an infrastructure that allows all the states to share in commerce, defense and to allow for free emigration from state to state. This is much the same as the EU was designed to do, is it not?

It isn't necessary to have a Firearm to shoot bullets.There are other

West Berlin was blockaded by the USSR to try to cause a collapse so the USSR could have all of eastern Germany.

The USA had to do to extremes to keep is from happening.

JS - With One Ounce of Gold going for $1300

Cheaper and simpler would be to have enough 20~50 Lb Bags Rice put away to feed four for Six Months.

Or simply to Store some Heartland Emergency Food {Freeze Dried}
http://www.heartlandemergency.com/

Have a Home "Larder" with a Weeks, a Months, 3-Months, 6-Months, a Years Supply of Food for a Family of Four to Eat and Live-On.

None of the above is any good without Water and having a Safe Water Supply for your Family that is Independent from the Public Water Supply : Well, Pond and/or Lake and the means to ensure that it is Safe to Drink

-both- Filtered and Treated for Drinking and Cooking; and the ability to do this for a Year.

Plus the Ability to Protect Yourself and your Family for a Year and Hunt for Food for a Year :
An old 30-30 Winchester with 1000 Rounds of Ammo will go along way to accomplish both.

Switzerland's little secret Aircraft hangers hidden away/disguised in the Mountains.

Mike, I know that you and Steve have issues, but his, and your, on-topic radio postings are well done. Steve's "pirate" posting, Top News, and other news is definitely a good thing. Your logs from using your Eton are just as good. I am saying that on-topic postings are all good here, especially John Plimmer's. These damn "political, talk-show, BS" posts make this place a sewer. My kill files are loaded. I just get sick of that stuff and strike out at them sometimes. I do have a clue, collecting boat anchors and classic portables, using them mostly for BCBDX, but occasionally still tuning the SW bands.

Switzerland is much safer than the USA. My friends, which have visited there, have all moved there. They love it ...
